PREFACE.

THE following pages contain an account of the Liturgy and Ritual of the Celtic Church in these islands, so far as their character can be ascertained from the limited sources of information open to us. They relate to a subject about which, until recently, very little was known. The great continental Liturgiologists of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries were either silent about it, or dismissed it as offering no data for information and no materials for investigation. Mabillon wrote: 'Qualis fuerit apud Britonos et Hibernos sacrificandi ritus, non plane compertum est. Modum tamen illum a Romano diversum exstitisse intelligitur ex Bernardo in libro de vita Malachiae, capitibus iii et viii, ubi Malachias barbaras consuetudines Romanis mutasse, et canonicum divinae laudis officium in illas ecclesias invexisse memoratur.'—De Liturgia Gallicana, lib. i. c. ii. § 14. Gerbert wrote: 'In dubio est qui et qualis antiquitus ea in orbis plaga fuerit ordo operis Dei.'—Lit. Aleman. i. 76.

In more recent times Dr. Lingard has disclaimed all possibility of any knowledge of the subject: 'Whether the sacrificial service of the Scottish missionaries varied from that of the Romans we have no means of judging.'—Anglo-Saxon Church, edit. 1858, vol. i. p. 271.

Sir W. Palmer in his Origines Liturgicae (i. 176–189) devoted one short chapter to the Liturgy of the Celtic Church, which consisted largely of guesses and of the repetition at secondhand of statements which he was unable to verify, but which, were he to write now, he would either abandon or modify. Within the last few years extensive additions have been made to the scanty materials available to Sir W. Palmer in 1839, in some instances by the discovery, in other instances by the publication for the first time, of various ancient Irish and Scottish liturgical fragments; by the printing of certain important Celtic manuscripts; by the collection in palæographical and archæological volumes of the representations in Celtic illuminated MSS.; by the examination of architectural remains, and of stonework inscriptions and designs.

The sources from which the information contained in the present volume has been drawn are chiefly the following:

(a) Scattered notices in the works of contemporary writers; viz. fifth century, Fastidius, Patricius, Secundinus; sixth century, Columba, Fiacc, Gildas; seventh century, Cuminius Albus, Adamnanus, Columbanus. Bachiarius and Sedulius are omitted from this list, in consequence of the uncertainty attaching to their date and nationality. Non-Celtic authors, e.g. Alcuin, Bede, Bernard of Clairvaux, Jonas, Walafrid Strabo, &c., have been frequently referred to.

(b) Scattered notices in Celtic MSS., viz. Catalogus Sanctorum Hiberniae, Leabhar Breac, Sinodus Hibernensis, Senchus Mor, &c.

(c) Fragments of the ancient Celtic Liturgy surviving in the Stowe (ninth century), Drummond (eleventh century), and Corpus (twelfth century) Irish Missals; in the Books of Mulling (seventh century), Dimma (seventh century), Deer (ninth century), Armagh (ninth century); in Irish MSS. on the Continent, Nos. 1394 and 1395 (ninth century) at St. Gall, and the Antiphonarium Benchorense (eighth century) at Milan, and in a few other MSS. enumerated in Chapter iii.

(d) Illuminations in Celtic manuscripts, which have lately become accessible to the untravelled student in the magnificent volumes of Professor Westwood, Mr. Gilbert, and the late Dr. Todd.

(e) Architectural remains of churches, sepulchral inscriptions, sculptured crosses, carved or engraved book-covers, caskets, pastoral staves, bells, chalices, spoons, and other ecclesiastical relics.

In drawing information from such various quarters the author can hardly hope to have escaped all errors of detail, and not to have hazarded some conjectures which will be criticised, and to have drawn some conclusions which will be disputed.

A certain element of incompleteness is still inevitable in the treatment of this subject from the state of a part of the material from which our knowledge is derived. Some important Irish manuscripts, as the Stowe Missal, &c., have never been published; others, as the Leabhar Breac, &c., have been published in facsimile, without note or comment, and need the editorial explanations of some one who is at once an antiquarian, an ecclesiastical historian, and a palæographer, in order to assign their date and value to the historical, ecclesiastical, and liturgical tracts of which they are composed¹. There is a vast amount of unsifted and undated, or erroneously dated, material preserved in various collections, especially in the Bollandists' edition of the Acta Sanctorum. Much of it might be useful for illustration in matters of detail, even where it could in no sense be relied upon as historical. But until some discriminating hagiologist shall have undertaken the laborious task of visiting the various European libraries, and critically examining the original MSS. from which such Lives are drawn, and publishing the result of such investigations, they must be regarded as more likely to mislead than to inform. Occasional reference has been made to a very few of these biographies, viz. those of Cogitosus, Ultan, St. Evin, &c., which have been passed and repassed through the crucible of modern criticism, and the evidential value of which it has therefore been possible approximately to ascertain. The general importance of this hagiologic literature has been discussed by the late Sir Thomas Duffus Hardy, in his Preface to the Rerum Britannicarum mediæ ævi Scriptores (pp. 18-20), a work which includes a dated catalogue of all the MS. material accessible in Great Britain; and, so far as Ireland and Scotland are concerned, by Mr. Skene (Celtic Scotland, ii. cap. x, and Chronicles of the Picts and Scots, Preface). Its value for liturgical illustration is diminished by the fact that it all belongs to a period subsequent to the conformity of the Celtic Church to the Church of Rome. This appears plainly on the face of such unhistorical passages as the following in Ultan's Life of St. Bridget. The author thus describes her dream and consequent action: 'In urbe Romana juxta corpora Petri et Pauli audiui missas; et nimis desidero ut ad me istius ordo et universa regula feratur a Roma. Tunc misit Brigida viros sapientes et detulerunt inde missas et regulam.'—Cap. 91. The introduction of the Roman Liturgy into the Irish Church is antedated in this passage by many centuries. Its historical value is equal to that of the next chapter, which describes St. Bridget hanging her clothes to dry on a sunbeam.

A part of Chapter ii has previously appeared in the form of an article in the Church Quarterly Review (vol. x. p. 50), and a part of Chapter iii in letters to the Editor of the Academy.

Latin authorities have been frequently quoted in extenso.

Gaelic authorities have merely been referred to. Long passages in the ancient dialects of Ireland, Scotland, and Wales would have added considerably to the bulk of the volume, and would have been unintelligible to the majority of readers.

The retention of an original orthography will explain the occasional occurrence of such forms as 'sinodus,' 'imnus,' 'cremen,' &c., for 'synodus,' 'hymnus,' 'crimen,' &c. The retention of a popular nomenclature will account for such forms as Charlemagne, Iona, &c., instead of Karl the Great, Hi, &c.

It would not be possible to compile such a volume as the present one without being largely beholden to the labours of other writers. The source of information has been generally indicated in foot-notes, but in case of accidental omission the author begs once for all to express his indebtedness to such recently deceased writers as Dr. Todd, Mr. Haddan, and Bishop Forbes, and to such living writers as Professor Stubbs, Mr. Skene, and Dr. Reeves, from whose edition of Adamnan's Life of St. Columba, as from a rich quarry, a knowledge of many facts recorded in this volume has been obtained. It is doubtful whether in the annals of literature so much important information has ever before been so lavishly accumulated and so skilfully arranged within a few hundred pages, or whether any other editorial task has ever been more thoroughly executed.

The author also begs to express his thanks to the Earl of Ashburnham for his kind permission to inspect and copy out the liturgical portion of the MS. volume known as the Stowe Missal, and to Professor Rhys, Mr. Whitley Stokes, Professor Westwood, and Mr. Henry Bradshaw for their kindly-afforded assistance in linguistic and palæographical questions respectively.

[This list is not exhaustive. It only includes certain well-known works, to which frequent reference has been made, in the case of which it seemed desirable to specify once for all the edition made use of; and certain less-known works, to which occasional reference has been made, and to which it seemed desirable to append the date of their composition, and of the earliest MS. authority.]

Adamnani Canones: see Canones.

Adamnani Vita S. Columbae. The Latin text, taken from an early eighth-century MS. at Schaffhausen, was published with copious notes by Dr. Reeves at Dublin, 1857. Adamnan was the ninth presbyter-abbot of Iona, A.D. 679-704. Rolls Series, Descriptive Catalogue, vol. i. pt. i. p. 167.

Antiphonarium Benchoresense. A seventh-century MS. originally belonging to the monastery of Bangor, county Down. It is proved from internal evidence to have been written A.D. 680-691, during the life-time of Abbot Cronan. It is now preserved in the Ambrosian Library at Milan. It has been printed in Muratori's Anecdota Bibliothecae Ambrosianae, vol. iv. pp. 121-159; Migne, Patrol. Curs. Lat. lxxii. 582; Ulster Journal of Archaeology, 1853, pp. 168-179.

- Catalogus Sanctorum Hiberniae*: traditionally believed to have been composed by Tirechan c. 650, and certainly not later than the middle of the eighth century. Printed by Archbp. Ussher, De Brit. Eccles. Prim. cap. xvii, from two MSS. of which he does not give the date. H. and S. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 292.
- Codex MS. Vetustissimus. A document containing information about the British Liturgy, assigned by Spelman to the ninth century on palaeographical grounds, but proved on internal evidence to have been written in the eighth century. Printed in H. and S. i. 138.
- Cogitosi Vita S. Brigidae*: printed in Colgan, Trias. Thaum. pp. 518-26. The date of this work is discussed in the Transactions of the Royal Irish Acad. vol. xx. pp. 195-205. The earliest MS. authority for it belongs to the middle of the ninth century. Cogitosus has been identified with the father of Muirchu Macumatheni (ob. A.D. 699); therefore the work must originally have been written c. A.D. 650, unless Mr. Skene is right in his conjecture, that the work has been fathered on Cogitosus, and erroneously assigned to the seventh century (Celtic Scotland, ii. 296); a conjecture supported by internal evidence, see p. 90. Rolls Series, Descriptive Catalogue, i. 106.

- Culdees: see Rule of.
- Cumini De mensura Poenitentiarum, or Poenitentiale. It is doubtful how far this work retains its original Scottish form. Wasserschleben considers that it has so far lost it as to rank it among Frankish rather than Celtic Penitentials. Haddan and Stubbs (Introd. p. xii) incline to consider it the work of a Bishop Cummin at Bobbio, A.D. 711-744. It may however be regarded as founded upon an earlier Celtic work. References are made to Fleming's Collectan. Sacra, p. 197, by whom it was printed from a St. Gall MS., No. 550.

- Cuminii Albi (or Cummenei, or Cumeani), Vita S. Columbae: written by Cummene Ailbhe, son of Ernan, seventh presbyter-abbot of Iona, A.D. 657-669. The reference, unless otherwise specified, is to Pinkerton's edit. Rolls Series, Descriptive Catalogue, i. 166.

- Evin, St., Vita S. Patricii: a ninth, tenth, or eleventh century compilation (Skene's Celtic Scotland, ii. 442; Chron. of Picts and Scots, Pref. xxix), known as the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, attributed to his disciple St. Evin in the sixth century, by whom it was supposed to have been written partly in Irish and partly in Latin. Translated in Colgan, Trias Thaum. pp. 117-169, from three Irish MSS. which cannot now be with certainty identified. Rolls Series, Descriptive Catalogue, i. 65.
- F. = Féilire of Oengus, q. v.
- Fastidii De Vita Christiana Liber unus: addressed by Fastidius, Bishop of London in the fifth century, to a widow named Fatalis. This book bears internal marks of genuineness, and is no doubt the work alluded to by Gennadius of Marseilles writing at the end of the fifth century. 'Fastidius Britanniarum Episcopus scripsit ad Fatalem (quendam) de Vita Christiana librum unum, et alium de viduitate servanda, sana et Deo digna doctrina.' Gennadius (c. 458), De Viris Illustr. in Hieron. Opp. v. 39. Bened. It has been printed by Migne, Patrol. Curs. Lat. vol. l. p. 385; Galland. Bib. Vet. Pat. ix. 481.
- Féilire of Oengus: a metrical account of the festivals of the Church, attributed to Oengus the Culdee in the beginning of the ninth century, but certainly written after A.D. 982, preserved in the Leabhar Breac, and in six other MSS. of which an account is given by Mr. Whitley Stokes (pp. 2-6). It is described in E. O'Curry's Lectures on MS. Materials of Ancient Irish History (pp. 364-71), and has recently been published by Mr. Whitley Stokes with translation and glossary in the Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, Irish MS. Ser. vol. i. part 1, June, 1880. Arabic numerals refer to pages in the Leabhar Breac, Roman numerals to pages in Mr. W. Stokes' edition.
- Fiacc, St., Bishop of Slebhite (c. 418-495), Gaelic Hymn of: perhaps composed as early as the end of the sixth century. The earliest extant MS. copy is in the Liber Hymnorum, q. v. Printed in H. and S. ii. 2. Mr. Skene considers this hymn a composition of the ninth century (Celtic Scotland, ii. 435). Rolls Series, Descriptive Catalogue, i. 62.

- Jonas Vita S. Columbani. Jonas, a native of Susa in Piedmont, wrote (c. A.D. 624) by order of Attala and Eustace, successors of Columbanus, the former at Bobbio, the latter at Luxeuil. Several MSS. of this Life exist on the continent, none of them probably earlier than a ninth-century copy which was sold in London at M. Liber's sale, March 9, 1858 (Catal. No. 269, p. 63). It is printed in Fleming's Collectanea, ii. 214-243. Rolls Series, Descriptive Catalogue, i. 212.

CHAPTER I.

INTRODUCTION.

It would be alien to the purpose with which this volume is written, and impossible within the limits which it is intended to assume, to present to the reader a complete history of the 'Celtic Church;' but it is necessary to define at the outset what is meant by that term, and it will be advantageous to add to this definition a notice of such of its more important features and general characteristics as have an a priori bearing on the probable genus of its Liturgy and Ritual, which will then be described with as much detail as the nature of the subject-matter and the amount of evidence at our disposal render possible.

§ 1. EXTENT AND DURATION OF THE CELTIC CHURCH.—By the term 'Celtic Church' is meant the Church which existed in Great Britain and Ireland (with certain continental offshoots) before the mission of St. Augustine, and to a varying extent after that event, until by absorption or submission the various parts of it were at different dates incorporated with the Church of the Anglo-Saxons¹.

Central England.—The Celtic Church in Central England became extinct at the close of the fifth century, its members being then either exterminated in war, or retiring to the remoter parts of the country for shelter from the attacks of heathen invaders from Jutland, Sleswick, and Holstein. In those more distant quarters the ancient national Church maintained a separate existence and a corporate continuity long after the conversion of the Anglo-Saxons which was begun by the Roman mission under the leadership of St. Augustine.

Wales.—The Britons of North Wales did not conform to the usages of the Anglo-Saxon Church till A.D. 768, those of South Wales not till A.D. 777. The supremacy of the See of Canterbury was not fully established here till the twelfth century.

Southern England.—The British Church in Somerset and Devon, or to speak more exactly the British population dwelling within the territory conquered by the West-Saxons, conformed at the beginning of the eighth century, through the influence of Aldhelm, who became Abbot of Malmesbury A.D. 671, Bishop of Sherborne A.D. 705¹.

In Cornwall the Bishops of the British Church were not subject to the See of Canterbury before the time of King Athelstan (925-940), the submission of Bishop Kenstec to Archbishop Ceolnoth (833-70) being the only exception. On the conquest of Cornwall by the Saxons the British Bishop Conan submitted to Archbishop Wulfhelm, and was recognised by King Athelstan, who formally nominated him to the Cornish See of Bodmin A.D. 936².

Northumberland.—The Celtic Church, established in Northumberland by King Oswald A.D. 634-5, after having flourished thirty years under the Scottish bishops Aidan, Finan, and Colman, successively, conformed to the Roman practice at the Synod of Whitby A.D. 664; when Colman, who had throughout unsuccessfully opposed the change, 'perceiving that his doctrine was rejected and his sect despised, took with him such as were willing to follow him, and would not comply with the Catholic Easter and coronal tonsure,—for there was much controversy about that also,—and went back into Scotia, to consult with his people what was to be done in this case¹.

Strathclyde.—The Britons of Strathclyde conformed A.D. 688, the year after the death of St. Cuthbert, on the occasion of a visit among them of Adamnan, Abbot of Iona, who himself had been persuaded about this time to adopt the new policy. Sedulius, the first British Bishop of Strathclyde who conformed to Roman usage, is mentioned as present at a council held at Rome under Gregory II, A.D. 721².

Scotland.—Adamnan attempted to force the Scottish Church to conform to Roman usage at the close of the seventh century, after his return from his second mission to King Aldfrith in Northumbria A.D. 688, but unsuccessfully. His action is thus recorded by Bede:—

‘Adamnan, priest and abbot of the monks who were in the isle of Hii, was sent ambassador by his nation to Aldfrith, King of the Angles, where, having made some stay, he observed the canonical rites of the Church, and was earnestly admonished by many who were more learned than himself, not to presume to live contrary to the universal custom of the Church in relation to either the observance of Easter or any other decrees whatsoever, considering the small number of his followers seated at so distant a corner of the world. In consequence of this he changed his mind, and readily preferred those things which he had seen and heard in the Churches of the Angles to the customs which he and his people had hitherto followed. For he was a good and wise man and remarkably learned in the knowledge of the Scriptures. Accordingly returning home he endeavoured to bring his own people that were in Hii, or that were subject to that monastery, into the way of truth, which he himself had learned and embraced with all his heart, but in this he could not prevail³.’

³ Bede, H. E. v. 15.

After the death of Adamnan, A.D. 704, there were two parties in this controversy, which was eventually settled in favour of the Roman rule by a decree of Nectan, King of the Picts, A.D. 710. 'Not long after which,' says Bede, 'those monks also of the Scottish nation who lived in the isle of Hii, with the other monasteries that were subject to them, were, by the procurement of our Lord, brought to the canonical observance of Easter and the right mode of tonsure. For in the year after the incarnation of our Lord A.D. 716, the father and priest Egberct, beloved of God, and worthy to be named with all honour, coming to them from Ireland was very honourably and joyfully received by them . . . and by his pious and frequent exhortations he converted them from the inveterate tradition of their ancestors. He taught them to perform the principal solemnity after the Catholic and Apostolic manner. The monks of Hii by the instruction of Egberct adopted the Catholic rites, under Abbot Dunchad (A.D. 710-717), about eighty years after they had sent Bishop Aidan to preach to the nation of the Angles¹.'

But the acceptance of the Paschal rule at Hii in 716 did not settle the practice of that Church finally, for we are informed that the Easter-tide of Egberct's death (A.D. 729) was the first Easter celebrated according to the Roman calculation². A schism had taken place at Iona A.D. 704, and rival abbots existed till A.D. 772, when on the death of the Abbot Suibhne the conformity of the whole monastery of Iona to the Roman Church may be considered to have been established³. But this remark does not apply to the whole of Scotland. Customs and ritual peculiar to the ancient Church of the country existed long after the eighth century. When St. Margaret, a Saxon Princess, married King Malcolm III, A.D. 1069, she promoted a religious reformation, which is said to have included the abolition of the following four Scottish customs:—

1. The commencement of Lent on the first Monday in Lent instead of on Ash Wednesday. This is the custom at Milan to the present day. It may perhaps be traced in the Sarum direction to cover up all crosses, &c. on the first Monday in Lent.

2. The non-reception of the Holy Eucharist on Easter Day. It is difficult to understand this statement, because Easter Day in the early Scottish Church was 'the festival of joy¹,' and the Easter Communion was especially singled out for mention². In the early Irish Church it was enjoined on all the faithful by one of the canons attributed to St. Patrick³. A King of Leinster is said to have paid a visit to St. Bridget, in order to listen to preaching and celebration on Easter Day⁴.

3. Labour on the Lord's Day.

4. Strange customs in the Mass.

St. Margaret's biographer tells us that 'in some places among the Scots there were persons who, contrary to the custom of the whole Church, had been accustomed to celebrate Masses by some barbarous rite, which the Queen, kindled with God's zeal, so laboured to destroy and bring to nothing, that thenceforth there appeared no one in the whole race of the Scots who dared to do such a thing⁵.'

⁵ 'Praeterea in aliquibus locis Scottorum quidam fuerunt, qui contra totius Ecclesiae consuetudinem, nescio quo ritu barbaro, missas celebrare consueverant; quod regina, zelo Dei accensa, ita destruere atque annihilare studuit, ut deinceps qui tale quid praesumeret, nemo in tota Scottorum gente appareret.' Theoderic, Vit. S. Margaret. cc. 8 sq.; H. and S. ii. i. 158.

In the absence of any direct statement as to what these liturgical peculiarities were, we are left to conjecture either that they were connected with the celebration of Mass in the vernacular instead of in the Latin language¹, or, with more probability², that up to the eleventh century the Ephesine and the Roman Liturgies were used contemporaneously in Scotland, somewhat in the same way that in France a transition period can be traced through such service books as the 'Sacramentarium Gallicanum,' in which Ephesine and Petrine forms present themselves alternately. The above charges also indicate that the final extinction of the old Celtic Church in Scotland was partly owing to internal decay, as well as to the line of policy adopted by Queen Margaret and Malcolm Canmore, which was the same as that adopted in the next century by the Anglo-Norman kings towards Ireland. Neither a national Church nor a religious movement can be easily extinguished by royal authority, unless there are other and co-operating influences at work. St. Margaret was not immediately successful in her attempts at suppression. Fifty years later, in the reign of King David, we learn that the Culdees 'in a corner of their church which was very small used to celebrate their own office after their own fashion³.' It is the last spark in the expiring embers of the controversy and the struggle for supremacy between two elements in the ecclesiastical history of Scotland; the old national Celtic element represented by the independence of the Scottish episcopate and the retention of the ancient Missal; and the Anglicising element, patronised by the royal authority of Malcolm Canmore and Queen Margaret, subjecting the Scottish episcopate to the supremacy of York, and introducing the Anglicanised (Roman) Missal. It is possible but not certain that this was the Use of Sarum. St. Osmund published that Use in A.D. 1085. St. Margaret died in A.D. 1093. There was therefore time for her to have seen, approved, and initiated the circulation of the Sarum Missal; but considering the slowness of communication in those days, and the time necessarily occupied in the transcription of copies, it is more probable that she introduced the Anglican rite in the form in which it existed before it was arranged by St. Osmund. This probability is increased by the fact that the Sarum Use was not introduced into the Cathedral and See of Glasgow till the time of Bishop Herbert (A.D. 1147-64.)

Ireland.—The Celtic Church in the South of Ireland conformed to Rome on the Paschal controversy, and probably in other respects as well, during the pontificate of Honorius (A.D. 626-638). The letter of that Pope, urging such conformity, has been preserved by Bede¹, and the letter of Cummián, Abbot of Durrow, written A.D. 634 to Segine, fifth Abbot of Iona, announcing the determination of Southern Ireland to conform to Roman usage, is still extant². The Church in Northern Ireland was induced to take a similar step, at the instance of Adamnan, at the Synod of Tara, X A.D. 692³.

But in the case of Ireland, as in Scotland, complete conformity to Roman usage was not secured for many centuries

³ An account of this synod is given in Reeves' edition of Adamnan's Life of Columba, Appendix to Preface, p. 1.

afterwards. The last vestiges of the old national rite, and of liturgical and ritual independence, were not swept away till the time of St. Malachy, the great Romaniser—the Wilfrid—of the Irish Church. Born A.D. 1075, he became Bishop of Armagh (1134-1148), and in that capacity visited Pope Innocent II, demanded the pallium, which had not hitherto been worn by Irish bishops, and was invested with legatine authority over the Irish Church. His biographer St. Bernard expressly states that ‘Roman laws and ecclesiastical customs were introduced by him into his native country¹.’ And again, ‘He established in all Churches the Apostolical constitutions, and the decrees of the holy fathers, and especially the customs of the holy Roman Church².’ Gillebert, the papal legate, Bishop of Limerick (1106-1139), implies that there had been more than one Liturgical Use in Ireland previously to that date. He said in the Prologue of a book ‘De Usu Ecclesiastico,’ addressed to the whole clergy of Ireland:—

‘At the request and also at the command of many of you, most dearly beloved, I have endeavoured to set down in writing the canonical custom of saying the hours, and performing the office of the whole ecclesiastical order, not presumptuously, but desiring to serve your most godly command, in order that those diverse and schismatical orders, with which nearly all Ireland has been deluded, may give place to one Catholic and Roman Office³.’

At a Synod held at Kells A.D. 1152, under the papal legate

MS. in Camb. Univ. Lib., ff. i. 27. Art. 16.

Johannes Paparo, further steps were taken to enforce conformity to Roman usage¹.

In the year 1172, at the Synod of Cashel, presided over by Christianus, Bishop of Lismore and papal legate, the Anglican Use, that is to say the Sarum modification of the Roman Missal, was ordered to be introduced into every Church in Ireland, by the following canon:—

‘From this time forward let all the divine offices of the Holy Church be performed in all parts of the (Irish) Church, according to the Use of the Church of England².’

The above-quoted passages, while implying a previous diversity of liturgical usage and a discrepancy between that of Ireland and that of Rome, unfortunately afford no direct information as to what the nature of the early Celtic Liturgy was. It will be the endeavour of the following pages to throw some light on this at present unsolved and perhaps, to a certain extent, insoluble question.

Continent.—The Celtic Churches on the Continent, founded by the missionary enterprise of the native Church of these islands chiefly during the fifth, sixth, and seventh centuries, included parts of modern France, Belgium, Prussia, Austria, Italy, Switzerland, and Spain. Iceland and the Faroe Islands also were colonised by Celtic missions.

The cessation of Celtic usage in the greater part of this Continental Church is closely connected with the life and efforts of the Anglo-Saxon apostle of Germany, St. Boniface (A.D. 680-755). In Spanish Galicia Celtic usage as to Easter, &c. was abrogated by the Fourth Council of Toledo, A.D. 633, can. 41. In Brittany British customs prevailed till A.D. 817, when they were abolished under Louis le Débonnaire, and at the same time the Rule of St. Benedict was everywhere substituted for that of St. Columbanus¹.

Among the peculiar features and distinguishing characteristics of this wide-spread Celtic Church, the following are deserving of especial mention :—

§ 2. ITS MONASTIC AND MISSIONARY CHARACTER.—Monasticism was during the best known period of Celtic Church History a more conspicuous feature and prevailing element of the Celtic Church than of any other portion of the Western Church at any other time. Not only was it a feature, as it is in other Churches East and West, which comprise a regular and a secular clergy side by side, but the first Church in these islands seems to have been at one time so far entirely monastic in its character that its hierarchy consisted of regular clergy almost exclusively, a secular priesthood being, if not unknown, at most an inconsiderable minority². As it overflowed its own territorial limits, and invaded the continent of Europe, it was rendered for a time doubtful whether the monastic ideal of later Christendom would spring from a Celtic or an Italian quarter, whether it would be represented in the Rules of St. Columbanus and St. Columba, or of St. Benedict. For its exclusively monastic constitution was closely bound up with its missionary character, and was at once the cause of its temporary triumph and of its ultimate decay.

Success in missionary enterprise can only be achieved, and has only been achieved, on any large scale, from the time of the Apostles downwards, by men who have so far caught the ascetic spirit as to surrender this world and its ties to the exclusive and absorbing task of the evangelisation of mankind. But a Church which attempts to frame almost its whole constitution on a monastic basis, which provides no outlet for the zeal and earnestness which, while shrinking from the total self-surrender and separation from the world involved in the monastic life, will fill the avocations of a secular priesthood, may achieve a brilliant but shortlived success, but aims at too high an ideal for permanent success. This fact, added to the intolerable severity of the Columban Rule (p. 17), seems to be the key to the rise and fall of the Celtic Church.

There are however passages which prove that a married priesthood was not unknown in various parts, and at various periods in the history of the Celtic Church. St. Patrick (fifth century) says that he was the son of a deacon and the grandson of a priest¹. An early Irish canon alludes to priests' wives:—

'Quicumque clericus ab hostiario usque ad sacerdotem sine tunica visus fuerit . . . et uxor ejus si non velato capite ambulaverit pariter a laicis contemnentur et ab ecclesia separantur².'

The words of Gildas (A.D. 547) may imply a married priesthood in Britain in the sixth century, and have been quoted in that sense by Archbishop Ussher³. They form part of the 'increpatio in sacerdotes' with which the 'Epistola i. Gildae' concludes:—

'[Paulus dicit] "unius uxoris virum." Quid ita apud nos quoque contemnitur quasi non audiretur et idem dicere et "virum uxorum." . . . Sed videamus et sequentia. "Domum" inquit "suam bene regentem, filios habentem subditos, cum omni castitate." Ergo imperfecta est patrum castitas, si eidem non et filiorum accumuletur. Sed quid erit ubi nec pater, nec filius mali genitoris exemplo pravatus, conspicitur castus? Si quis autem domui suae praeesse nescit, quomodo Ecclesiae Dei diligentiam adhibebit?'

³ Op. iv. p. 294.

Notices of married bishops, priests, and deacons, and of various attempts to enforce clerical celibacy in the tenth century, and of the opposition encountered, prove that a married clergy existed in Wales till the eleventh or twelfth century¹. There are also allusions to married priests in the Celtic Church in Brittany². These facts have led a modern Roman Catholic author to make the unhistorical assertion that 'l'Eglise Romaine tolera quelque temps chez les Brétons et les Irlandais l'ordination des hommes mariés, comme elle la tolere encore chez les catholiques des rites orientaux³.' Why did he not add 'comme elle la tolera autrefois chez les catholiques de Rome'? There are allusions to married episcopi, presbyteri, and diaconi in the inscriptions in the Catacombs⁴. But the existence of married priests in the Celtic Church was due to independence of, not to toleration by, the Roman See.

Some idea of the monastic character and extent of the Celtic Church may be gained from a bare enumeration of a few of its more famous houses.

One of the successors of St. Patrick, Luan by name, is asserted by St. Bernard to have founded alone a hundred monasteries¹. The smaller islands round Ireland swarmed with them. Ten monasteries were founded by St. Enda alone on one of the Aran isles off the coast of Galway².

In Scotland numerous monasteries were founded by St. Columba and his monks among the Picts and Scots, the names of fifty-three of which, in addition to his own central monastery at Iona, have been preserved, at Soroby, Dunkeld, Inchcolm³, &c. Many of the Scottish monasteries were placed on islands, which, perhaps on account of their superior safety, had a great fascination for the Celtic monk⁴.

In France: Remiremont, Lure, Besançon, Romain-Moutier, Bezieres, Brezille, Cusance, St. Ursanne, Jouarre, Reuil, Rebais, Faremoutier, St. Maur-les-Fosses, Lagny, Moutier-la-Celle, Hautvilliers, Moutier-en-Der, St. Salaberga, Fontenelles, Jumièges, St. Saens, Luxeuil (A.D. 599), Anegray, Fontaines, Peronne, Toul, Amboise, Beaulieu, Strasbourg, in addition to other countless and nameless 'Hospitalia Scotorum,' alluded to in the Capitularies of Charles the Bald, A.D. 846⁵.

The above mentioned were Irish foundations. Brittany had been colonised by British Christians at a much earlier date. The single Welsh monastery of Llan-Iltut numbered among its disciples SS. Malo, Samson, Teilo, Magloire, Briuec, Frugdual, Corentin, Gildas, &c., all of whom are reported to have passed over into Brittany, in consequence of the persecution of the Saxons, and there to have founded In Italy: Bobbio (A.D. 612), Taranto, Lucca, Faenza, Fiesole.

This list might be largely extended. It does not include many monasteries which, Celtic in their origin, passed subsequently into foreign hands, as was the case with Great St. Martin's at Cologne, where, as elsewhere, when the first fervour of its Celtic inmates dwindled away, their places were filled up by the inhabitants of the country in which the monastery was situated². St. Bernard compared the missionary inundation of foreign countries by the Irish to a flood³. A list of 122 monasteries founded by Irishmen in England, Scotland, and on the Continent was collected by Colgan in a lost work, of which the Index has been preserved and is printed in the Proceedings of the Royal Irish Academy, vol. vi. p. 106.

They were of various sizes. Those planted on the barren

² Notice of its Irish origin is preserved in a fragment of an eleventh-century chronicle from a palimpsest vellum leaf printed in Pertz, Monum. Germ. Hist. tom. ii. p. 214. It begins thus:—

'Scoti multo tempore illud incoluerunt, donec a primo fervore tepescentes ex hoc, sicut etiam ex aliis quibusdam monasteriis expulsi sunt, et alii Germani sunt substituti.' &c.

A good deal of detail about the later Celtic monasteries on the Continent will be found in the Chronicle of Marianus Scotus, whose Irish name was Maelbrihte, but who, like most of his countrymen, assumed an equivalent and more pronounceable Latin name. He died in seclusion at Mentz A.D. 1082; Pertz, Monum. Germ. Hist. v. 481.

islands off the coasts of Great Britain and Ireland must have been small. Others were very large. The Irish monastery of St. Finnian of Clonard, and that of St. Comgall at Bangor, were said to contain three thousand inmates. The Welsh monastery of Bangor-Iscoed contained, according to Bede, two thousand one hundred monks, of whom twelve hundred were slaughtered under the Northumbrian King Æthelfrith¹. St. Patrick asserted that the number of Irish men and women who embraced the monastic life in his own time was incalculable².

The structure of the monasteries was of a simple and inexpensive character. Like the early Celtic churches (ch. iii) they were built at first of earth, and wattles, or wood. It was not till the end of the eighth century that stone buildings began in Scotland and Ireland to be substituted for wooden ones, as a protection against the ravages of the Danes.

The Rule of the Western monks, as laid down in the writings of St. Columbanus, was very severe, far more so than the Rule of St. Benedict. Its principles were absolute and unreserved obedience, constant and severe labour, daily self-denial and fasting; and the least deviation from the Rule was visited with corporal punishment or a severe form of fast, the precise number of blows and of days or hours of fasting being minutely prescribed³.

It is frequently alluded to along with other Irish Rules in the Lives of the Saints, passages from which have been collected by Dr. Reeves in his edit. of Archbishop Colton's Visitation of Derry, p. 109. It was mentioned by Wilfrid in his controversy with St. Colman: 'De patre autem vestro Columba et sequacibus ejus, quorum sanctitatem vos imitari, et regulam ac praecepta caelestibus signis confirmata sequi perhibetis, possem respondere.' Bede, H. E. iii. 25.

In describing the success of St. Aidan's mission to Northumberland, Bede speaks of the erection of churches and monasteries where 'imbuebantur prae-

The chief occupation of all the monks, and the only occupation of the more aged, apart from the services of the Church, consisted of reading and writing. It was said of the Irish monastery of Lughmagh under Bishop Mochta, that

‘Threescore psalm-singing seniors
Were his household, royal the number,
Without tillage, reaping, or kiln-drying,
Without work except reading’¹.

The office of Scribe (Scribhnidh or Scribhneoir) was of such honour and importance in an Irish monastery, that the penalty for shedding his blood was as great as that for killing a bishop or abbot². Sometimes in Scotland, in the seventh to tenth centuries, a scribe was elected to be an abbot or a bishop, and the head of a diocese or monastery thought that it added to the dignity of his position to be able to append the title of ‘scriba’ to his name. Baithene, the second Abbot of Iona, was an accomplished scribe, and was selected by Columba before his death to finish the Psalter left incomplete by himself³. and 978, and the Bishop of the Isles of Alba in 961, are also recorded to have been scribes¹.

St. Patrick is said to have first taught his converts letters in a passage which is interpreted as attributing to him the introduction of a written alphabet. If so, it was probably the Irish or Latin-Irish alphabet supplanting the earlier Ogham characters²; and the books of Durrow, Kells, Dimma, Mulling, &c. survive to show what apt scholars the Irish were, and to what a marvellous pitch of perfection calligraphy reached within a few centuries after St. Patrick's death³. The art of writing was transferred from Ireland to Scotland by St. Columba and his followers. It may have flourished at an earlier date in Southern Pictland at the time of St. Ninian's mission, as doubtless it flourished in the early British Church in England, but invading waves of heathenism had swept that earlier Christian civilisation away, and all traces of its sacred and liturgical writings are irrecoverably lost. But in connection with Iona there are many references to books. St. Columba himself wrote a volume containing hymns for the various services of the week⁴. He possessed a volume containing the Prayers and Ceremonial for the Consecration and Coronation of Kings, which, perhaps on account of its beautiful binding, was called the 'book of glass' and considered to be of celestial origin⁵. His last occupation on earth was the writing of a Psalter, and he was engaged in transcribing the thirty-fourth Psalm for it on the evening before his death⁶. Baithene wrote a Psalter so correctly that a single omission of the vowel 'i' was the only mistake which St. Columba could find throughout it¹. There are many other allusions to books and writing, as in the case of the awkward monk who dropped the book which he was reading into a vessel full of water², and of the impetuous guest who in his anxiety to greet St. Columba managed to spill that saint's ink-horn³.

Sometimes the monks wrote on wax tablets, ceracula, pugillaria, tabulae, with a hard pointed instrument, graphium, or stimulus. 'Cum in agro ipse sederet allato angelus Domini ceraculo eum litterarum docuit elementa⁴.'

Adamnan narrates in his work 'De Locis Sanctis' how Bishop Arnulf 'primo in tabulas describenti fideli et indubitabili narratione dictavit quae nunc in membranis brevi textu scribuntur⁵.'

In the Codex Sangallensis, 242, entitled 'De pugillaribus id est parvis tabulis,' there is a gloss written over v. 3, Sicut videtur in tabulis Scotorum. The parchment skins ('membranae'), the use of which superseded the 'ceracula,' were either bound together in the form of a volume⁶, or assumed the shape of a long scroll⁷. The word commonly in use for writing was caraxare, charaxare, crazare, crasare, or xraxare. The Irish monk Arbedoc, who wrote the MS. Cod. Lat. Paris. 12021, begins by invoking the Divine blessing thus: 'Mihi xraxanti literas missereatur trinitas.' Adamnan closes his work 'De Locis Sanctis' by a request that the reader would offer a prayer 'pro me misello peccatore eorundem craxatore.' The same Abbot closes his Vita S. Specimens of the early Scottish style of writing survive in an eighth-century MS. Life of Columba by Adamnan, Codex A at Schaffhausen, and in the Book of Deer written by a native scribe of Alba in the ninth century. These two MSS. are specially mentioned because the facsimiles of the originals which accompany the careful editions of the books by Dr. Reeves and Mr. Stuart place samples of early Scottish calligraphy within the reach of every modern reader. Their ornamentation and initial letters, though less elaborate than those of the Book of Kells and other early Irish MSS., confirm the statements so often made in the Lives of the Saints, that the arts of designing, drawing, and illuminating were extensively practised in these early times². Other monks were skilful workers in leather, metal, and wood. St. Patrick himself was said to have been accompanied by workers in bronze and artificers of sacred vessels³. It was recorded of St. Dega, an Irish monk and bishop (d. 586), that he spent his nights in transcribing MSS., his days in reading them, and in carving in copper and iron⁴. Among the articles of most frequent construction were costly reliquaries for enshrining the remains of saints, metal cases of embossed bronze or silver (cumhdachs) for enclosing copies of the Gospels or other MSS., and leathern cases (polaires) for carrying about portable missals and other service books¹.

Education was also carried on by these early monks. Their monasteries were seminaries for the training of the native youth², and were frequented by adult foreigners, who flocked to Ireland from all parts of Great Britain, France, and the Continent generally for purposes of study³. Among the distinguished persons who thus visited Irish or Scottish monasteries were Egbert and Chad⁴, the French Agilbert, who succeeded Birinus as second Bishop of Dorchester A.D. 650⁵, Aldfrith, who succeeded his brother Ecgfrith as King of Northumbria A.D. 685⁶, Willibrord, the Anglo-Saxon missionary to Frisia A.D. 690⁷, &c.

While the seniors were exclusively engaged in the sedentary occupations of reading, writing, and teaching, the younger monks also laboured in the various departments of husbandry, at least so far as to provide for the wants of their own monasteries. When St. Columba visited the monastery of Clonmacnois the monks at work in the fields flocked together to receive him⁸. St. Cuthbert and St. Fursey worked with their own hands⁹. St. Gall went fishing while his monks

One short fragment of an ancient Celtic Pontifical survives in the Public Library, Zurich, in an Irish handwriting of the tenth century. The first page is quite illegible, having been made the outside cover of a book. Page 2 contains these words:—

[De Virgine Investienda.]

‘(a) Permaneat ad prudentibus qui . . . virginibus vigilantia . . . adferre copuletur . . . per.

(b) Oremus, fratres carissimi, misericordiam ut euntum bonum tribuere dignetur huic puellae N. quae Deo votum candidam vestem perferre cum integritate coronae in resurrectione vitae aeternae quam facturus est; orantibus nobis, praestet Deus.

(c) Conserva, Domine, istius devotae pudorem castitatis dilectionem continentiae in factis, in dictis, in cogitationibus; Per te, Christe Jesu, qui.

(d) Accipe, puella, pallium candidum quod perferas ante tribunal Domini.’

This fragment is interesting as showing that the office for the reception of a nun into a Celtic monastery included, in addition to the ceremony of crowning, the formal presentation of a white dress, which is not part of the ‘Ordo de Consecratione Virginum’ in the present Roman Pontifical. Nor are (a) (b) (c) (d) found elsewhere, although a formula resembling (d) accompanies the presentation of the veil, in a tenth-century order for the ‘Consecratio Sacrae Virginis’ printed in Gerbert, Liturg. Aleman. ii. 96: ‘Accipe velum sacrum, puella, quod praeferas sine macula ante tribunal Domini nostri Jesu Christi.’

And again in the tenth-century copy of the Pontifical of

The monastic was closely connected with the missionary character of the Celtic Church. The list of monasteries given on pp. 14-16 proves how widespread was the area once covered by its evangelistic agency and monastic development; but such development was not the work of one century, nor due to the energy of a single portion of the Celtic Church.

It began by the colonisation of Brittany from the British Church in the fifth century².

A British colony was established in Spanish Galicia in the sixth century, where a Celtic See was occupied by a bishop named Madoc, c. A.D. 570³.

In the same century the Irish Church began to exhibit its missionary power. The Christianising of the whole of the north and north-west of Scotland and its adjacent islands was due to St. Columba, chief among the missionary Irish. He was Abbot of Iona, and patron saint of Mull, Tiree,Islay, Oronsay, and Lewis. Maccaldus, a native of Down, became Bishop of Man in the fifth century; St. Donnan of Egg; St. Maelrubha of Skye; St. Moluoc of Lismore, and Raasay; St. Brendan of Seil; St. Molaise of Arran; SS. Catan and Blaen of Bute. St. Columba's successors at Iona converted in a similar way the whole of the Anglo-Saxon population north of the Humber. St. Aidan, the Apostle of the Northumbrians (A.D. 634), whose diocese extended from the Humber to the Frith of Forth, was an Irishman and a monk of Iona; so were his successors Finan and Colman, the latter of whom resigned his see after the Synod of Whitby A.D. 664, and retired to his native country rather than accept its anti-Scottish decisions¹. Diuma, the first bishop of the Mercians, and his successor Ceollach, were both of them Irishmen, the former certainly and the latter probably having been brought up at Iona. Other distinguished Irish saints in England were St. Fursa, who planted Christianity at Burghcastle in Suffolk; Mailduf (Meildulfus), the founder of Malmesbury; St. Bega, the foundress of St. Bees in Cumberland; St. Moninna (Modwenna), the patron saint of Burton-on-Trent; St. Ciaran, or Piran, whose name occurs frequently in the dedications of Cornish churches².

But Irish missionary zeal sought a vent beyond the confines of Great Britain. Early in the sixth century (A.D. 511) the Irish St. Fridolin appeared at Poitiers, Strasbourg, and Seckingen near Basle, as the pioneer of future missionary hosts. Late in the sixth and early in the seventh centuries St. Columbanus and St. Gall, with their companions, traversed Gaul, Italy, and Switzerland, founding their chief monasteries at Luxeuil, Bobbio, and St. Gall. Soon afterwards St. Kilian, with his companions the priest Totman and the deacon Colman, penetrated to Würzburg, where he was martyred A.D. 687; and the later names of Fiacrius, Chillenus, Furseus, Ultanus, Foillanus, &c., celebrated at Lagny near Paris, at Meaux, Peronne, &c., indicate the Irish nationality of many who laboured successfully in propagating the Christian faith in France, Belgium, and other parts of central Europe. Less known Irish missions also carried Christianity to the Faroe Isles c. A.D. 725, and to Iceland A.D. 795¹. Thus between the fifth and eighth centuries the Celtic Church extended, with intermissions, North and South from Iceland to Spain, East and West from the Atlantic to the Danube, from Westernmost Ireland to the Italian Bobbio A.D. 612, and the German Salzburg A.D. 696.

Even beyond these limits Irishmen were afterwards and occasionally elected bishops, as Cataldus at Taranto and his brother Donatus at Lupiae in the eighth century, and another Donatus at Fiesole a century and a half later.

It will have been noticed that all the great leaders in this Celtic wave of missionary enterprise were of Irish origin, viz. St. Columba, the Apostle of the Picts and Scots; St. Aidan, the Apostle of Northumbria; St. Columbanus, the Apostle of the Burgundians of the Vosges district of Alsace; St. Gall, the Apostle of North-east Switzerland and Alemannia; St. Kilian, the Apostle of Thuringia; and Virgilius, the Apostle of Carinthia.

§ 3. ORTHODOXY OF THE CELTIC CHURCH.—There are no substantial grounds for impugning the orthodoxy of the Celtic Church. On the contrary, there is unimpeachable evidence the other way. But expressions have been sometimes used with reference to it which would lead to a different conclusion. Pope Gregory probably knew very little about the faith of the British Church when he claimed the right of subjecting to the jurisdiction of Augustine 'not only the bishops whom he should ordain, but also all the priests in Britain, that they might learn the rule of believing rightly and living well from his life and teaching².'

² Bede, H. E. i. 29.

Certainly Britain, like the rest of Christendom, may have been partially tainted with Arianism in the fourth century, when certain British bishops at Ariminum A.D. 359 were deceived or terrified into signing a semi-Arian creed; and with Pelagianism in the fifth century, which was the cause of the joint visit of Germanus Bishop of Auxerre and Lupus Bishop of Troyes A.D. 429, and of another visit of Germanus with Severus Bishop of Treves, A.D. 447. But the Gallican bishops are recorded to have been eminently successful in their mission, and to have returned across the Channel leaving the Catholic faith firmly established in these islands¹. The real difficulty here is to understand how the rationalism of Pelagius can have had even a passing attraction for the naturally superstitious and mystic Celt, not how Germanus succeeded in stamping it out. There is nothing in these admitted facts to justify us in inferring from the above-quoted words of St. Gregory that the Celtic Church was destitute of any '*forma recte credendi*²;' or in acquiescing in the language of an Anglo-Saxon Synod (A.D. 705), which took steps for 'the destruction of the malignant and too flourishing heresy of the Britons³.'

On the other hand, a catena of evidence can be produced to disprove the charge of heresy and in support of the orthodoxy of the first Church of the British Isles. Hilary of Poitiers (A.D. 358) congratulates the bishops of the British provinces on 'their having continued uncontaminated and uninjured by any contact with the detestable heresy¹' (of Arianism). Athanasius (A.D. 363) states that the British Churches had signified by letter to him their adhesion to the Nicene faith². St. Chrysostom (A.D. 386-398) said that 'even the British Isles have felt the power of the word, for there too churches and altars have been erected. There too, as on the shores of the Euxine or in the South, men may be heard discussing points in Scripture, with differing voices but not with differing belief, with varying tongues but not with varying faith³.' St. Jerome (c. A.D. 400) asserted that 'Britain in common with Rome, Gaul, Africa, Persia, the East, and India, adores one Christ, observes one rule of faith⁴.' Venantius Fortunatus (c. A.D. 580) testified to British orthodoxy in the sixth century⁵, and Wilfrid in the seventh century. The testimony of the latter, whose hostility to the Celtic Church was notorious, is as honourable to himself, as it is placed beyond all suspicion of inaccuracy or exaggeration. Present at Rome A.D. 680 at a council of a hundred and twenty-five bishops, held in anticipation of the Œcumenical Council of Constantinople in the same year against the Monothelites, Wilfrid asserted that the true Catholic faith was held by the Irish, Scottish, and British, as well as by the Anglo-Saxon Church⁶. It had therefore been no vain boast of Columbanus to Pope Boniface (A.D. 612) that his Church was not schismatical or heretical, but that it held the whole Catholic faith⁷.

² 'Tua vero fraternitas . . . omnes Britanniae sacerdotes habeat . . . subjectos, quatenus ex lingua et vita tuae sanctitatis, et recte credendi et bene vivendi formam percipiant, atque officium suum fide ac moribus exsequentes, ad coelestia, cum Dominus voluerit, regna pertingant.' Bede, H. E. i. 29.

Had it been otherwise, could British bishops have been present certainly at the Council of Arles A.D. 314, perhaps at Nice A.D. 325, probably at Sardica A.D. 347¹? Could the conferences have taken place at Augustine's Oak A.D. 603, and at Whitby A.D. 664, without at all events far more serious questions having been raised than the form of the tonsure or the calculation of Easter²? Would Wini Bishop of Winchester have associated two British bishops with himself in the consecration of St. Chad A.D. 664³?

Both direct testimony and indirect inference lead us to conclude with reference to the whole Celtic Church what Montalembert allows with regard to primitive Ireland, that it was 'profoundly and unchangeably Catholic in doctrine, but separated from Rome in various points of discipline and liturgy⁴.'

§ 4. INDEPENDENCE OF ROME.—Another noteworthy feature of the Celtic Church was its independence of the Roman Church in its origin, mission, and jurisdiction.

Before the sixth century Roman claims were not opposed, partly because such claims were not yet in existence in the form which they assumed after St. Augustine's mission, partly because, so far as they may have existed potentially, there was an entire unconsciousness of them on the part of the Christian Church in these islands.

The contrary view has notwithstanding been entertained, and rests on the testimony of early and generally trustworthy witnesses on the Roman side, or on later native writers, who however do not profess to be independent or original authorities on this subject.

Bede attributes the conversion of England to the agency of Pope Eleutherus (A. D. 171-190), during the joint reigns of Aurelius and Verus (161-9), in the time of the British prince Lucius¹.

This story is now known to have originated in Rome in the fifth or sixth century, 300 years or more after the date assigned to that event. In the eighth century Bede introduced it into England, where by the ninth century it had grown into the conversion of the whole of Britain, while the full-fledged fiction, connecting it specially with Wales and Glastonbury, and entering into further details, grew up between the ninth and twelfth centuries².

Prosper of Aquitaine (A. D. 402-463), who went to Rome on a mission to Pope Cælestine, A. D. 431, and was afterwards secretary to Pope Leo the Great, writing c. 455, asserts with regard to the conversion of Ireland that 'Palladius was consecrated by Pope Cælestine (422-432), and sent to the Scots believing in Christ, as their first bishop³.' This is the original source of a statement which reappears in substance, though not in this exact form, in many later documents, and with considerable additional detail. It would be difficult to find any other sentence penned by any ecclesiastical historian which has caused so much confusion, or which has been so variously interpreted. In the first place, who were the Scots to whom Prosper refers? We know beyond a doubt that they were the inhabitants of Ireland, but this necessary limitation of the meaning of the term

³ 'Ad Scotos in Christum credentes ordinatur a Papa Coelestino Palladius, et primus episcopus mittitur.' Prosper, Chron. Consular. ad ann. 429. before the tenth century has only recently become generally accepted and understood, and it is probable that the later legends connecting Palladius with Scotland, as found in the Aberdeen Breviary, in the Leabhar Breac, and in the Scoti-chronicon of John of Fordun (14th cent.), have originated in a misinterpretation of Prosper's language. Secondly, who was Palladius? Was he, as Prosper intimates rather than asserts, a Roman, or, as is stated in the Book of Armagh, an archdeacon of the Church of Rome¹? or was he, as Dr. Todd concludes, a Gaul², and is to be identified with a certain Gallican bishop, commemorated under the name of Patricius, at Clermont, in the Roman martyrology on March 16? or was he an Irishman? and as the annotations of Tirechan on the Life of St. Patrick state that 'Palladius was also called Patrick³,' has there been some confusion between St. Palladius and St. Patrick, and can statements which were meant to apply to the one have become transferred to the other? Thirdly, what is the force of 'primus'? Is it to be interpreted chronologically, and accepted as a disproof of numerous later legends, which allude to the existence of Christianity and of Christian bishops in Ireland before A.D. 431? or are we to infer that there was previously a presbyterian form of Christianity in that country? or is 'primus' to be taken in the sense of precedence, and is it the primacy of Ireland which was conferred at this early date by a Bishop of Rome upon Palladius⁴? There is no contemporaneous evidence for the Roman mission of St. Patrick, for the earliest authority for which see p. 37.

The first introduction of Christianity into Scotland was due to the labours of Ninian among the Southern Picts

(c. A. D. 401), who, 'according to Bede,' had been regularly instructed in the faith and the mysteries of the truth at Rome¹; and who, according to Ailred², had been consecrated a bishop by Pope Siricius.

These statements appear again and again in the later annals and lives of the saints, acquiring a more circumstantial character the further they are removed from the period of which they profess to give an account. Their truth has been generally taken for granted by modern writers³, until the careful research of Messrs. Haddan and Stubbs has given the death-blow to the story of King Lucius and Pope Eleutherus⁴, and it may be suspected, although the difficulty of proving the negative has not been fully overcome, that the stories of the consecration of Palladius by Pope Cælestine and of Ninian by Pope Siricius are equally without foundation. For while Prosper and Bede must be accepted as generally impartial and trustworthy historians; no one can read the works of the former without noticing that his chief object was to magnify the importance of the Papacy⁵; and,

The reader will find facts on pp. 35-40 which disprove such a statement as far as the later Celtic Church—and therefore inferentially as far as the earlier Celtic Church—is concerned.

⁴ Councils, &c. i. 25.

Prosper says, 'Ad actionem Palladii diaconi Papa Caelestinus Germanum Autesiodorensis episcopum vice sua mittit, et deburbatis haereticis Britannos ad Catholicam fidem dirigit.' Chron. [after A.D. 455].

Constantius says, 'Eodem tempore ex Britanniiis directa legatio Gallicanis episcopis nunciavit Pelagianam perversitatem in locis suis late populos occupasse, et quamprimum fidei Catholicae debere succurri. Ob quam causam synodus numerosa collecta est: omniumque iudicio duo praeclara religionis lumina universorum precibus ambiuntur, Germanus et Lupus, apostolici sacer-on the other hand, Bede, who was removed by more than a century from the events recorded in the first Book of his Ecclesiastical History, was actuated by an intense dislike of the independent Celtic Church, which has been stigmatised by a modern Roman Catholic writer in the following words:—

‘This (i. e. the feeling and attitude of the British Church) is called by Bede, in language too like that which Muscovite writers of our own day employ in respect to the Poles, “a domestic and immoral hatred:” “Britones maxima ex parte domestico sibi odio gentem Anglorum et totius Ecclesiae Catholicae statum Pascha, minus recte moribusque improbis pugnant.” There is no just reason for imputing to the British Christians a lower rate of morals than those of the Saxon converts; but our venerable historian, blinded by his passions and prejudices, goes still further, and yields, as so many have done after him, to the hateful temptation of identifying the work of God with a human conquest. “Tamen et divina sibi et humana prorsus resistente virtute, in neutro cupitum possunt obtinere propositum; quippe qui quamvis ex parte sui sint juris, nonnulla tamen ex parte Anglorum sunt servitio mancipati.” (H. E. v. 23.) He says elsewhere (v. 18) that St. Aldhelm wrote “librum egregium adversus errorem Britonum, quo vel Pascha non suo tempore celebrant, vel alia perplura ecclesiasticae castitati et paci contraria gerunt.” In all Aldhelm’s writings that have been preserved to us there is not the least allusion to the irregular morals of the Celtic clergy¹.

So Bede uses such epithets as ‘nefanda’ and ‘perfida’ of dote qui,’ &c. De Vita Germani, i. 19. This is also Bede’s account, H. E. i. 7.

For further evidence of the pro-papal tendency of Prosper, read his Praetoriorum Sedis Apostolicae Episcoporum auctoritates, Praef. cap. vii, viii; Liber contra Collatorem, cap. v, xxi, xliii; Carmen de Ingratis, pt. i. ll. 40, 78, 184.

the British nation when he records their defeat by Æthel-frith at the battle of Chester A. D. 613, and the massacre of the monks of Bangor, in accordance with the prophecy of St. Augustine¹. The clue to such language is the fact that Bede wrote under the influence of two motives, independent in their origin but conducing to the same result. Firstly, there was a national hatred of the British Church and nation. This was no doubt largely due to a feeling of resentment at the absence of British evangelistic enterprise in Anglo-Saxon heathendom, of which Bede complains once and again². But we have seen that the British Church was not destitute of missionary power³; and more allowance must be made in the instance before us than Bede is inclined to make for the difficulties of the case. It is easier for the conquerors to preach to the conquered, than *vice versa*⁴. Mission work must have been very difficult while the state of feeling between the two nationalities was as embittered as it was still in the eleventh century, when any Welshman found armed east of Offa's Dyke was legally punishable by mutilation⁵. A second motive for Bede's violence may have been a desire to aggrandise Rome at the expense of the rest of Christendom, and to represent her as the mother of all Western Churches; a desire which began to exhibit itself as early as the fifth century in the writings of Prosper, and which Compare the threat and prophecy with which St. Augustine wound up the conference with British bishops at 'Augustinae ac': 'Quibus vir Domini Augustinus fertur minitans praedixisse, quia si pacem cum fratribus accipere nollent, bellum ab hostibus forent accepturi; et si nationi Anglorum noluisse viam vitae praedicare, per horum manus ultionem essent mortis passuri. became intensified instead of diminished in each succeeding century.

The following facts tend to prove a non-Roman origin of the Celtic Church.

(a) Incidental allusions in ancient documents to the existence of a primitive Christian Church in these islands differing from the Anglo-Roman or Scoto-Roman Church of later days.

Giraldus Cambrensis in his description of Ireland (A.D. 1185) narrates how 'in North Munster there is a lake containing two islands; in the greater island there is a church of the ancient monastic rule ('ecclesia antiquae religionis'), and in the lesser a chapel wherein a few monks, called Culdees, devoutly serve God¹. In South Munster the same traveller visited the church of St. Michael (*'ecclesiam antiquae nimis et authenticae religionis'*²). This ancient monastic rule may have been that not only of SS. Patrick, Columba, &c., but also of (1) Mansuetus, first Bishop of Toul in France (fourth century); (2) Sedulius, the Christian poet (fifth century); (3) Caelestius, the Pelagian (third and fourth centuries); (4) Eliphius and Eucharis, martyrs in France (fourth century). All these were Irishmen, and though much obscurity hangs over the history and date of (2) and (4), they may all have been trained under the pre-Roman *'antiqua et authentica religio Hiberniae'*³.

There are also allusions to an 'ecclesia primitiva' in Scotland in the Aberdeen Breviary⁴, the strange Masses of which were finally abolished by Queen Margaret⁵.

The independence of the ancient Cornish Church is attested by a passage in the Leofric Missal, an eleventh-century MS. in the Bodleian Library, which describes how Eadulf, the first Anglo-Saxon Bishop of Crediton (A.D. 909-34), acquired three properties in Cornwall that he might more frequently visit the erroneous and unruly Church in that county¹.

Its divergence from the Roman Church early in the eighth century had been complained of by Aldhelm Abbot of Malmesbury A.D. 705².

(b) The absence of any allusion to a Roman mission or jurisdiction in the few surviving genuine writings of Celtic saints, Gildas³, Fastidius, Aileran, Patrick, Sechnall, Fiacc, Columbanus, Columba, Cuminus, Adamnan.

(c) The presence in such writings of passages which are inconsistent with any recognition of Roman mission or authority. St. Patrick in his Confession and his 'Epistola ad Corotici subditos' is not only silent as to any commission from a Bishop of Rome, but describes himself in general terms as a bishop in Ireland, deriving his commission directly from God Himself. The latter letter opens thus: 'Patricius peccator indoctus, Hiberione constitutus episcopus, a Deo accepi id quod sum.'

² 'Auditum namque et diversis rumoribus compertum nobis est, quod sacerdotes vestri a Catholicae fidei regula, secundum Scripturae preceptum minime concordent.' Aldhelm, Ep. ad Gerunt. Reg. Damnoniae; H. & S. i. 672.

In other passages he attributes his Irish apostleship to an inward call, which he regarded as a divine command, and to a vision of a man (or an angel) in the night beckoning him over to Ireland¹. The earliest written records of St. Patrick, the Hymn attributed to St. Fiacc Bishop of Sletty, near Carlow, a convert and disciple of St. Patrick—the Hymn of St. Sechnall (S. Secundinus), another contemporary of St. Patrick, whose sister's son he is said to have been,—the ancient Life of St. Patrick, written by Muirchu Mac-cumachtheni at the dictation of Aedh Bishop of Sletty, (d. 698), and preserved in the Book of Armagh, all alike are silent as to any Roman mission of St. Patrick².

The language of a later Irish saint—Columbanus—representing the attitude of that portion of the Celtic Church to Rome at the end of the sixth and the beginning of the

² According to St. Sechnall, St. Patrick:

'Apostolatum a Deo sortibus est.'

This is the more remarkable as St. Peter is mentioned in the previous line without any allusion to a mission to St. Patrick from his successor in the See of Rome. And again:

'Dominus eum elegit ut doceret barbaros,

Quem Deus misit, ut Paulum ad gentes, apostolum.'

St. Fiacc's Hymn mentions the admonition of an angel (stanza 7); Liber Hymnorum, pp. 287–304; H. and S. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 339 n. The earliest Irish authority for St. Patrick's Roman mission are the annotations of Tirechan in the Book of Armagh, and the Scholia (ninth century or later) to St. Fiacc's Hymn.

The unhistorical character of Tirechan's Life of St. Patrick is demonstrated in Skene's Celtic Scotland, ii. 425. Bede does not mention St. Patrick. The 'Vita S. Patricii' sometimes printed among his works was written by the Irish Probus, ob. 859. Adamnan makes only one, and that quite an incidental, allusion to him: 'Nam quidam proselytus Brito, homo sanctus, sancti Patricii episcopi discipulus, Maucteus nomine,' &c. Vit. S. Colum. Praef. ii. p. 6.

seventh century, is quite inconsistent with any theory of its Roman origin, and must sound strange in the ears of a modern Ultramontane. The position assumed by Columbanus, writing on the Continent to the Pope, substantially amounted to this: an acknowledgment of the Bishop of Rome as a true bishop of the Church of Christ, and of the need of courteous language in addressing the occupant of so distinguished a See, with, throughout, an implied assertion of exemption from his jurisdiction, and a claim to be allowed to criticise freely, and from the independent standpoint of an equal, the character and conduct of any Roman pontiff.

The language which he used to Boniface IV is not that of a subordinate, but is couched in terms the freedom of which may have been resented then, but would certainly be resented now. He laments over the infamy attaching itself to the Chair of St. Peter in consequence of disputes at Rome¹. He exhorts the Pope to be more on the watch², and to cleanse his See from error, because it would be a lamentable thing if the Catholic faith was not held in the Apostolic See³. He says that many persons entertain doubts as to the purity of the faith of the Roman bishop⁴. He allows a high post of honour to the See of Rome, but second to that of Jerusalem, the place of our Lord's resurrection⁵. He upbraids the Roman Church for proudly claiming a greater authority and power in divine things than was possessed by other Churches merely because of a certain fact recorded in the Gospels, and denied by no one, that our Lord entrusted the keys of the kingdom of heaven to St. Peter, and points out that the prerogative of the keys stands upon a different basis, and must be wielded on other grounds¹.

Writers from a Roman standpoint have resorted to curious devices to escape the necessary inference from such passages. Dr. von Döllinger collects the courteous expressions contained in the Epistles of Columbanus, and deduces from them the conclusion that the Celtic saints 'recognised in the Roman Bishop the Head of the Church, and were in unbroken communion with him, and through him with the Church universal!' He sees in St. Columbanus' claim to Catholicity in a passage previously quoted² 'a clear proof of the Roman mission of St. Patrick³!'

Ozanam's explanation of Columbanus' language is still more amazing. It is due 'to the disordered eloquence of the seventh century. This period was one of those in which thought, ceasing to be the mistress of language, betrays itself orbis terrarum caput et ecclesiarum; salva loci Dominicæ resurrectionis singulari prærogativa.' Ep. iv. p. 143.

either by an excess or defect of expression, whereby a writer says less than he means, or more than he means, seldom what he means to say¹.

The whole subsequent history of the Celtic Church, both in these islands and on the continent, exhibits occasional proofs of its independence of, and hostility to, the claims of Rome.

In A.D. 601 Gregory entirely ignored the existence of the Celtic bishops, as bishops, in his answer to Augustine's sixth question whether consecration by a single bishop is valid. 'Yes,' he replied, 'in the English Church, while you are the only bishop, you can only consecrate in the absence of other bishops. But when bishops shall come over from Gaul they will assist you as witnesses at the ordination of a bishop².' In answer to his seventh question Gregory committed all the bishops of Britain to his supervision and control³, a position of subordination which they repudiated, not surely through any misapprehension of the nature and grounds of St. Augustine's claims, but because they ignored the theory of papal supremacy.

In A.D. 604 Augustine was succeeded in the See of Canterbury by one of his companions, Laurentius by name. 'Archbishop Laurence,' Bede tells us, 'not only attended to the charge of the new Church that was gathered from the English people, but also regarded with pastoral solicitude the old natives of Britain, and likewise the people of the Scots who inhabit the island of Ireland adjacent to Britain. For observing that the practice and profession of the Scots in their own country, and also those of the Britons in Britain itself, were less in accordance with Church order in many things, particularly because they used not to celebrate the solemnity of Easter at the proper time . . . he in conjunction with his fellow-bishops wrote them a letter of exhortation, beseeching and entreating them to keep the bond of peace and Catholic observance with that Church of Christ which is extended all over the world;’ of which letter these were the opening words: ‘To our lords and most dear brethren the bishops or abbots throughout all Scotia, Laurentius, Mellitus, bishops, the servants of the servants of God. When the Apostolic See, according to her practice in all the world, directed us to preach to the pagan nations in these western parts, and so it came to pass that we entered into this island which is called Britain, before we were acquainted with it, believing that they walked in the ways of the Universal Church, we felt a very high respect for the Britons as well as the Scots, from our great regard to their sanctity; but when we came to know the Britons we supposed the Scots must be superior to them. However, we have learned from Bishop Daganus coming into this island, and from Abbot Columbanus coming into Gaul, that the Scots differ not at all from the Britons in their habits; for Bishop Daganus, when he came to us, not only would not take food with us, but would not even eat in the same lodging where we were eating¹.’

Daganus was the Celtic bishop of Inverdaoile in Wexford. The Saxon Archbishop’s letter cannot have had all the desired effect, for writing 127 years later (A.D. 731) Bede implies that the state of separation and the feelings of enmity between the two Churches remained at least unchanged². In fact they became gradually intensified. The Roman attitude towards the Celtic Church, both British and Irish, in the latter part of the seventh century was one of unmitigated hostility.

Late in A.D. 664 St. Wilfrid went to France for consecration to his Northumbrian See, refusing to be consecrated at home by bishops out of communion with the See of Rome³. The whole of England, except Kent, East Anglia, Wessex, and Sussex, was at this time in communion with the Scoto-Celtic Church. Of the excepted parts, Sussex was still heathen. Wessex was under a Bishop Wini, in Gallican orders, and in communion with the British bishops. Kent and East Anglia alone remained in complete communion with Rome and Canterbury.

In A.D. 667 Pope Vitalian wrote to Oswy, saying that he would look out for a fit person to fill the Archiepiscopal See of Canterbury, a person who would eradicate the tares from the whole of the island, alluding under this expression to the clergy of the Celtic Church¹.

We learn from the Penitential of Archbishop Theodore (A.D. 668-690) that the validity of its Orders was denied, if not entirely, at least so far as to need a fresh imposition of hands by a Catholic bishop; the consecration of its churches was not recognised; its members were refused communion, without first making a formal submission; and doubts were thrown out even as to the validity of their baptism². And the Arch-

Et ideo in multa humilitate a vobis posco, ut me mittatis cum vestro praesidio trans mare ad Galliarum regionem, ubi Catholici Episcopi multi habentur, ut sine controversia Apostolicae sedis, licet indignus, gradum Episcopalem merear accipere.' Vit. S. Wilf. cap. xii. Eddius, like Bede, betrays a strong anti-Celtic bias, speaking of the 'schismatici Britanniae et Hiberniae' (ib. c. v.), and of 'peccatum ordinandi a Quartadecimanis in sedem alterius' (ib. c. xv).

bishop gave a practical proof that he meant what he said, by objecting to the regularity of Chad's consecration as Bishop of York (A.D. 665-6) because two of his consecrators, assistants of Wini of Winchester, had been British bishops, probably summoned from Cornwall for the purpose; and on Chad's transference to Mercia Theodore 'completed his consecration afresh in the Catholic manner¹,' A.D. 669.

In A.D. 687 the dying words of St. Cuthbert, himself a convert to Roman usage, with reference to that Celtic Church in which he had spent some thirty years of his life, exhibit much bitterness. 'Keep peace,' he said, 'one with another, and heavenly charity; and when necessity demands of you to hold counsel as to your state, take great care that you be of one mind in your conclusions; and, moreover, maintain mutual concord with other servants of Christ, and despise not the household of the faith who come to you seeking hospitality, but be careful to receive such persons, to entertain them, and to send them away with friendly kindness; and do not think you are better than other followers of the same faith and conversation; but with those that err from the unity of Catholic peace either by not celebrating Easter at the proper time, or by living perversely, have no communion².'

On the other hand, the members of the British Church reciprocated by in their turn regarding the Christianity of the Anglo-Saxons a thing of nought, and refusing to hold any intercourse with them. In the year A.D. 705, Aldhelm Abbot of Malmesbury, instructed by a West Saxon Synod, wrote a letter to Geruntius (Geraint) King of Damnonia (Devonshire and Cornwall), in which he complained that 'beyond the mouth of the Severn, the priests of Cambria, proud of the purity of their morals³, have such a horror of communication with us, that they refuse to pray with us in the churches, or to seat themselves at the same table: more than this, what is left from our meals is thrown to dogs and swine, the dishes and bottles we have used have to be rubbed with sand or purified by fire, before they will condescend to touch them. The Britons give us neither the salutation nor the kiss of peace; and if one of us went to live in their country, the natives would hold no communication with him till after he had been made to endure a penance of forty days.'

Aldhelm then proceeds to assume that these British Christians, with their bishops, are outside the pale of the Catholic Church, and to assert in language, which has often been heard in more modern times, that it is impossible to be a Catholic and yet not in visible union with the See of St. Peter.

'We entreat you on our knees, in view of our future and common country in heaven, and of the angels our future fellow-countrymen, do not persevere in your arrogant contempt of the decrees of St. Peter and the traditions of the Roman Church, by a proud and tyrannical attachment to the decrees of your ancestors. Whatever may be the perfection of faith and good works, they are unprofitable out of the Catholic Church. . . . To sum up everything in one word, it is vain for any man to take credit to himself for belonging to the Catholic faith, so long as he rejects the doctrine and rule of St. Peter. For the foundation of the Church and the consolidation of the faith, placed first in Christ and secondly in St. Peter, will not waver before the assaults of any tempest. It was on St. Peter that the Truth Himself conferred the privilege of the Church, saying, Thou art Peter, and upon this rock will I build my Church¹.'

In A.D. 816, the Council of Celchyth, under Wulfred Archbishop of Canterbury and Kenulf King of Mercia, passed a resolution questioning the ordination of certain Irish clergy and the efficacy of Sacraments administered by them¹.

The same state of antagonism between the Roman Church and the Celtic communities existed on the Continent. The Anglo-Saxon Winfrid, A.D. 680-755, better known as Boniface Archbishop of Mentz, and styled 'The Apostle of Germany,' regarded the Irish and British missionaries with whom he came in contact in Germany as little or nothing else than heretics. He induced Pope Gregory III (A.D. 731-741) to write a letter exhorting the bishops of Bavaria and Alemannia to reject the 'teaching and the ritual of the Gentiles,' and 'of those Britons who came there,' as well as of 'other false priests and heretics².' He delated two of them, Virgilius the Apostle of Carinthia, who had been known in Ireland as Ferghal Abbot of Aghabo, and Sidonius, to Pope Zachary A.D. 746, for incorrectly administering baptism, and though the Pope acquitted them on this score, Boniface secured their condemnation in the following year on a question of the existence and character of the antipodes. A third Irishman was charged with holding heretical views of baptism, and a fourth, named Clement, was condemned for heterodoxy A.D. 742, and afterwards imprisoned by Carloman.

The above facts present to our view a vast Celtic communion existing in Great Britain and Ireland, and sending its missions among the Teutonic tribes on the Continent, and to distant islands like Iceland; Catholic in doctrine and practice, and yet with its claims to Catholicity ignored or impugned by the Church of Rome; with a long roll of saints, every name of note on which is either that of one like St. Columbanus taking a line wholly independent of Rome, or, like Bishop Colman at the Synod of Whitby, directly in collision with her; having its own Liturgy, its own translation of the Bible, its own mode of chanting, its own monastic rule, its own cycle for the calculation of Easter; and presenting both internal and external evidence of a complete autonomy¹.

§ 5. EASTERN ORIGIN.—It is hardly possible to pass over in silence the theory of the Eastern origin of the Celtic Church which was once much in vogue, but which is now generally abandoned as untenable. This theory has, for obvious and polemical reasons, been maintained by all Protestant, and by some Anglican writers, while it has been as uniformly repudiated by writers of the Church of Rome². Neander writes: 'The peculiarity of the British Church is evidence against its origin from Rome, for in many ritual matters it departed from the usage of the Roman Church, and agreed much more nearly with the Church of Asia Minor³.'

On the other hand, Messrs. Haddan and Stubbs speak of 'the groundlessness of the so often alleged Orientalism of the early British Church,—Oriental in no other sense than that its Christianity originated like all Christianity in Asia, and found its way to Britain through (most probably) Lyons, and not through the then equally Greek Church of Rome, but without imprinting one single trace upon the British Church itself of any one thing in a peculiar sense Greek or

Oriental¹.' Elsewhere Mr. Haddan speaks of 'the common but utterly groundless idea of a specially Greek origin of the British Church².'

After such decided expressions of opinion from persons so qualified to form them, it is yet hoped that it may not be considered as labour thrown away to accumulate and lay before the reader the various converging facts which, though they do not establish a specially Oriental origin of the Celtic Church, yet go far to save such a theory from the charge of being 'utterly groundless,' and explain how it grew up. This theory is of course quite distinct from the ethnological question as to the origin of Celtic nations, and from the philological question as to the relation of the Celtic language to the Indo-Germanic family. Its discussion is complicated by the fact that the date of the evidence offered is sometimes difficult to ascertain. Such similarities as that of British weapons found in barrows, in form and alloy, to those found in the plains of Phœnicia, and of cromlechs and pillars in Ireland to stone monuments in Palestine³, have reference to an original connection long anterior to the introduction of Christianity, and are chronologically irrelevant to the subject in hand. The similarity in these and other points between Cornwall, Ireland and the East, is almost certainly due to the fact that in the earliest historical times the great traders and navigators were the Phœnicians, who brought their commerce to these shores, and may have influenced the manners and customs of their inhabitants in their architecture, arts, and manners. With regard to the carved symbol of the Greek cross which is frequently found, but not in a majority of cases, on the ancient sculptured stones of Christian Scotland⁴, while in Cornwall and Brittany the same form of the cross preponderates⁵, and with regard to other supposed signs of an Eastern origin said to be exhibited by the British Christian architectural remains in Cornwall¹, their use may be traced in all early Continental Western art, and is only due to the original connection of all Western Christianity with the East².

Architectural Evidence.—Mr. Fergusson makes the following remarks on the general Eastern character of early Christian Irish architecture:—‘Ireland possesses what may properly be called a Celtic style of architecture, which is as interesting in itself as any of the minor local styles in any part of the world, and, so far as at present known, is quite peculiar to the island. None of the buildings of this style are large, though the ornaments of many of them are of great beauty and elegance. Their interest lies in their singularly local character and in their age, which probably extends from the fifth or sixth century to the time of the English conquest in 1176. They consist chiefly of churches and round towers³ . . . No Irish church of this period, now remaining, is perhaps even 60 feet in length, and generally they are very much smaller, the most common dimensions being from 20 to 40 feet⁴. Increase of magnificence was sought more by extending the number than by augmenting the size. The favourite number for a complete ecclesiastical establishment was seven, as in Greece, this number being identical with that of the seven Apocalyptic Churches of Asia. Thus, there are seven at Glendalough, seven at Cashel, and the same sacred number is found at several other places, and generally two or three, at least, are found grouped together.

‘No church is known to have existed in Ireland before the Norman Conquest that can be called a basilica, none of them being divided into aisles either by stone or wooden pillars, or possessing an apse, and no circular church has yet been found; nothing in short that would lead us to believe that Ireland obtained her architecture direct from Rome; while everything, on the contrary, tends to confirm the belief of an intimate connection with the farther East, and that her early Christianity and religious forms were derived from Greece by some of the more southerly commercial routes which at that period seem to have abutted on Ireland.

‘Both in Greece and Ireland the smallness of the churches is remarkable. They never were, in fact, basilicas for the assembly of large congregations of worshippers, but oratories, where the priest could celebrate the divine mysteries for the benefit of the laity. It is not only at Mount Athos, and other places in Europe, but also in Asia Minor, that we find the method of grouping a large number of small churches together, seven being the favourite number and one often attained¹.

A little further on Mr. Fergusson alludes to the still older class of antiquities — ‘the circular domical dwellings found in the west of the island, constructed of loose stones in horizontal layers, approaching one another till they meet at the apex like the old so-called treasuries of the Greeks, or the domes of the Jains in India².’ Some words of Tertullian with reference to the Eastern sect of the Marcionites have been somewhat fancifully quoted as fitly describing these early Irish beehive-shaped buildings: ‘Habent apes favos, habent et ecclesias Marcionitae,’ &c.

Similar Christian architectural remains have been found in Cornwall (A.D. 250-450), and are described by Mr. Borlase in his 'Age of the Saints'¹.

In his Preface to the Sculptured Stones of Scotland Mr. Stuart quotes Dr. Wise's assertion that there is a striking similarity between the stone monuments of the East and those of Britain², and Mr. Chalmers' assertion that there are figures on some of the stones in Scotland identical with those on Gnostic gems³.

These and such like facts, without amounting to proof, are suggestive of Eastern origin or influence, more probably the latter. On the other hand, the explanation which has already been given⁴ of the existence of Greek crosses in Cornwall may be extended to all the other points of architectural similarity between the early Christian remains of Great Britain and Ireland and those of the East⁵.

Palaeographical Evidence.—The palaeographical evidence is at first sight strongly in favour of an Eastern connection, though the tendency of recent writers and of fuller investigation has been to modify the extent of the connection, or even to deny it altogether.

The distinctive style of ornamentation adopted or invented by native artists consisted of intricate designs formed—

1. By the use of dots, generally in different coloured inks.
2. By simple lines, straight or curved.
3. By the step-like angulated pattern.
4. By the Chinese-like z pattern.
5. By interlaced ribbons.
6. By interlaced zoomorphic patterns.
7. By various spiral patterns, which are by far the most characteristic of the whole.
8. By the formation of gigantic initial letters, sometimes occupying a whole page, which are filled up with geometrical designs of interlaced work, convoluted serpentine figures, spiral ornaments, grotesque birds, insects, quadrupeds, &c.¹

What is the origin of this style of Celtic art?

A Roman origin is impossible, because not a single Italian MS. nor a single piece of Italian sculpture can be produced older than the ninth century having a close resemblance to those of this country. The illuminations in the Book of Kells find no exact parallel in Italy. They resemble Assyrian or Egyptian rather than Italian work.

A Scandinavian origin, suggested by the existence of Runic inscriptions on stones found in various places, especially in the Isle of Man, is impossible, because all such stones are several centuries more recent than the oldest Celtic MSS., the writers of which had no intercourse with the inhabitants of Denmark or Norway.

An Eastern origin is suggested by the similarity of much of the Celtic ornamentation to that found in early Syriac, Egyptian, Ethiopic, &c. MSS., by a resemblance in the delineation of birds and animals to Egyptian fresco painting, in the manner of drawing the wings, in the conventional representations of eagles, lions, calves, &c., in the swathed mummy-like figures of Christ². The theory of such an origin is facilitated by the early commercial intercourse which is known to have existed between this country and the East, and by the frequent expeditions recorded to have been made by early Christian pilgrims of the Celtic Church to the Holy Land, and by the immigration of foreign ecclesiastics³. On the other hand, it is rendered doubtful by the fact that work resembling Byzantine work, and some features of Oriental ornamentation, are to be found in very early MSS. not only in the East, but also throughout Western Christendom⁴.

⁴ Professor Westwood said in his Palaeographia Sacra (1845, not paged):

A peculiarity of Greek writing, sometimes adopted by Celtic scribes, as in the Scottish Book of Deer; the Welsh ninth-century Ovid preserved in the Bodleian Library (Auct. F. iv. 32); the Irish Stowe Missal (ff. 18, 20-24); consists in the written letters depending from the line above them, instead of resting on the line beneath.

Another feature suggestive of Oriental influence is the introduction of the serpent as a common form of ornamentation in the elaborate illuminations of interlaced work which adorn the early Irish MSS. It is also prominent among Christian emblems on the rudely carved stone crosses, most of which are earlier than the ninth century, and some of which are coeval with the introduction of Christianity into these islands¹. This serpentine ornamentation reaches a climax on the case of St. Patrick's Bell (eleventh century), 'one side of which is beautified with stones with ornaments of fine gold representing serpents, curiously and elegantly intertwined in most intricate folds, and in various knots, like the complicated involutions in the collar of the Order of the Knights of St. Patrick. On one of the ends below the knob and ring by which it is suspended there are eight serpents so singularly infolded and intermingled with one another, that it requires minute attention and singular discrimination to trace each separately and to distinguish it from its fellows. Their eyes are skilfully formed of blue glass. Above the cross are four of the same kind, and in each of the four compartments into which it is divided there are two golden serpents in relief. Below the knob of suspension, on the opposite end or side, are six other serpents, with blue eyes, but differently intertwined. On the top is a strange representation of two of these creatures with two legs¹.

'The collection of many of these MSS. has also furnished additional though unlooked-for evidence that the ancient Church in these islands was independent of Rome, and that it corresponded, on the contrary, with the Eastern Churches. . . . These apparently trifling circumstances (ornamental details) seem to me to prove, more forcibly than the most laborious arguments, the connexion between the early Christians in these islands and those of the East, so strongly insisted on by various writers.' It is fair to add that in 1868 the Professor seems so far to have modified his opinion of the Eastern origin of the style of illumination as to speak of it as probable rather than as capable of positive proof; Facsimiles, &c., Intro. p. 5.

For the prominence of the serpent in the ancient worship of Africa, Asia, Egypt, Greece, see Dennis, G., Cities and Cemeteries of Etruria, vol. i. p. 169, note 1. edit. 1878; Fergusson, J., Tree and Serpent Worship, London, 1873, Intro. Essay.

The serpent continued to make its appearance in the Ritual of the Anglo-Saxons, according to a traditional use possibly perpetuated from their Celtic predecessors. On Maundy Thursday, after Nones, a procession went down to the church door, bearing with it a staff which ended at the top in the shape of a serpent. There, fire, struck from a flint, was first hallowed, and then used for lighting a candle which came out of the serpent's mouth. From this all other candles were lighted; and the same ceremonial was repeated on Good Friday and Easter Eve².

The serpent appears in the Mozarabic Liturgy, which contains the following rubric amid the ceremonial of Easter Eve: 'Hic exeat Subdiaconus cum cruce hoc ordine. Ceroferarii cum cereis pergant coram cruce; et cereus paschalis coram cereis, et serpens coram cereo,' &c.³ There is no evidence as to early Gallican usage on this point, but the serpent-rod was in use at Rouen as late as the commencement of the eighteenth century⁴, and in England up to the sixteenth century⁵.

Another custom common to Ireland and the East, though not exclusively confined to Ireland among Western nations, was that of providing their more precious sacred books with leather satchels called 'polaires,' furnished with straps for slinging round the shoulder, and ornamented in a kind of basso-relievo produced by stamping the leather. Woodcuts of the polaire of the Book of Armagh and of the shrine of St. Maidoc are given in Mr. Petrie's Round Towers, pp. 329, 322; Archæologia, vol. xliii. plate xiv. There are before the writer at this moment the leather satchel of the Irish Missal belonging to C. C. C. Library, Oxford, and the leather satchel of an Æthiopic MS. of about the same date belonging to St. John's College, Oxford. They resemble each other so closely in texture and design that they might be thought to have come from the same workshop.

An independent origin is claimed for the Celtic style of ornamentation by some modern writers; as by Mr. French, who thinks that it is an imitation of the interlaced wicker-work of gigantic animals within which the natives in a pre-Christian period immolated their victims¹. The anonymous writer of a recent article on this subject gives it as his view that 'English interlacings and Irish spirals are not traditional or taught ornament, but the special fancies of a race;' and again, speaking of the miniatures in the Book of Kells the same writer says that 'they are constructed not without power or beauty, but with the quaintness which marks the work of an isolated Church, which owed Rome nothing, and to which Greece or Syria had taught nothing but the faith².'

Liturgical Evidence.—The monastic rule of the Celtic Church has been often ascribed to an Eastern origin³. Its canons, so far as they can be judged from the extant remains of the Rules of St. Columba, Columbanus, Adamnan, &c., are not identical with any other Eastern or Western code. They are found on comparison rather to resemble the former than the latter in the greater severity of their regulations¹, which probably caused them to give way eventually before the milder Rule of St. Benedict, and in the appearance in the Rule of St. Columbanus of such Eastern words as paximacium, paracaraximus, Archimandrita, *Nonnus*².

The scattered traces of Oriental influence in the remains of the Celtic Liturgy and Ritual may be summed up as consisting of the following points:—

(a) The episcopal benediction immediately preceding the communion of the people, and sometimes bestowed in the Eastern fashion³.

(b) The veiling of women at the reception of the Eucharist⁴.

(c) The use of unleavened bread⁵.

(d) The custom of fasting on Wednesdays and Fridays⁶ is spoken of by Archbishop Ussher as ‘agreeable to the custom of the Grecian rather than of the Roman Church⁷.’ But there does not seem to be sufficient authority for drawing such a distinction.

(e) Several of the points of Celtic Ritual, specified on p. 61 as Gallican, are Oriental in their origin.

Historical Evidence.—Mention may be made, in connection with the above facts, of the constant allusions to the East, and especially to Jerusalem, in the legendary lives of the saints; e.g. in the legend connecting Scotland with St. Andrew as its patron saint, and describing the arrival of Regulus, a monkish pilgrim from the city of Constantinople, bringing the bones of the Apostle from the East. The oldest document containing this legend is of the twelfth century, and is printed in the *Chronicles of the Picts and Scots*¹. So in the legendary lives of St. Bonifacius², St. Servanus³, and of others enumerated in Haddan and Stubbs' *Councils, &c.*⁴, in the legendary consecration at Jerusalem, in the sixth century, of St. David first Bishop of St. David's, St. Teilo second Bishop of Llandaff, St. Patern Bishop of Llandabarn. Sometimes Eastern pilgrims visited Ireland. Seven Egyptian monks, buried at Disert Ulidh, are invoked in the *Félire of Oengus*⁵.

Celtic saints sometimes referred to Eastern authority in self-defence, in their controversies with Rome. St. Columbanus, soon after the arrival of his mission in Gaul A.D. 590, protected himself from the charge of schism, and defended the Celtic mode of determining the fall of Easter, by referring to the authority of Anatolius Bishop of Laodicea, A.D. 270. He accused the continental Church of innovation; its computation having been altered by Sulpicius Severus A.D. 410, by Victorius of Aquitaine 450, by Dionysius Exiguus 525; and he finally declared to Pope Boniface his readiness to abide by the second canon of the Second Council of Constantinople, 'Let not bishops go out of their dioceses to churches out of their bounds, nor bring confusion on the Churches,' &c.

At the Synod of Whitby, while St. Wilfrid urged the acceptance of the Roman calculation of the fall of Easter on the authority of St. Peter, Bp. Colman defended the Celtic cycle on the authority of St. John. 'Then Colman said, The Easter which I keep I received from my elders who sent me bishop hither; all our forefathers, men beloved of God, are known to have kept it after the same manner; and that the same may not seem to any contemptible or worthy to be rejected, it is the same which St. John the Evangelist, the disciple beloved of our Lord, with all the Churches over which he presided, is recorded to have observed¹.

British clergy are recorded to have visited Constantinople during the patriarchate of Methodius (842-847) for the sake of obtaining information about the Paschal cycle².

The above facts go far to explain and justify the opinion that there must have been originally some connection between the Celtic and Oriental Churches. But this connection need not have been direct. The most probable hypothesis is that Christianity reached the British isles through Gaul, and that whatever traces of Eastern influence may be found in the earliest Liturgy and Ritual of Great Britain and Ireland are not due to a direct introduction of Christianity from the East, but to the Eastern character and origin of that Church through which Christianity first reached these shores.

§ 6. GALRICAN CONNECTION.—There is strong circumstantial evidence in favour of the immediately Gallican origin of the British Church, and for fixing the date of its foundation between A. D. 176 and 208. In the former year Irenaeus, enumerating the Christian Churches then in existence, made no allusion to any Church in Britain³. In the latter year Tertullian wrote a passage which contains the first historical allusion to the existence of Christianity in these islands⁴. The dispersion of the Gallican Church in the fierce persecution which raged in Gallica Celtica—the district round Lyons and Vienne—A.D. 177 probably brought Christian refugees across the Channel, and in accordance with a law of growth often exemplified in the early history of Christianity, the blood of Gallican martyrs became the seed of the British Church¹. This early Gallican Church was a colony from Asia Minor. Pothinus the first Bishop of Lyons had come directly from that country, bringing with him Irenaeus the disciple of Polycarp, the disciple of St. John. The names of its bishops and martyrs were Greek. The writings of its saints and some of its earliest extant inscriptions are in the same language. The account of its sufferings under Marcus Aurelius was sent by the Christians of Lyons and Vienne by letter to their brethren in Asia and Phrygia². Any features of Oriental ritual in the British Church may be accounted for and traced, as has been already suggested³, through this intermediate Gallican channel.

Other proofs are forthcoming of the intercourse which existed at a subsequent date between these islands and France. Passages indicating an intercourse of the British and Gallican Churches during the first six centuries are found in the writings of the anonymous author of a tract De Septem Ordinibus Ecclesiae, Arnobius junior, St. Patrick, and Venantius Fortunatus⁴. During the fourth and fifth centuries there was a constant emigration of British Christians into Armorica, and legendary lives exist of many saints who migrated from Wales or Cornwall into Brittany A.D. 450–600⁵. British bishops at various Gallican Councils is attested by their signatures, as at Tours A.D. 461, at Vannes 465, at Orleans 511, at Paris 555. Mansuetus the first Bishop of Toul was an Irishman¹; Mansuetus was also the name of the first known Breton bishop; St. Beatus Bishop of Lausanne, and Apostle of Switzerland (fourth century), was likewise Irish. There was also constant commercial intercourse between the two countries. Diodorus Siculus states that tin was exported from Britain to Gaul, and transported through Gaul to the mouths of the Rhone and to Narbonne². Strabo speaks generally of the exchange of commerce between Britain and Gaul³. When St. Columbanus was at Nantes, and the authorities there wished to send him back to Ireland, an Irish merchant-ship was found lying in the harbour ready for the purpose⁴. Gallic traders are reported to have visited Clonmacnois in the days of St. Kieran, A.D. 548-9⁵. Gallic sailors with their ship came to Iona or its immediate neighbourhood in the sixth century⁶.

The intimate connection between Wales and Brittany can be traced up to the eleventh century, when Rhys ap Tewdwr, the representative of the royal line of South Wales, took refuge there, returning thence to his throne in 1077 with the unanimous consent of the people⁷.

There are traces of the presence or influence of many Gallican bishops in England; St. Martin of Tours⁸ (371-97), Hilary of Poitiers⁹ (350-67), Victoricius of Rouen¹⁰ (c. 407),

We may also note the dedication of Celtic churches to Gallican saints; as in the case of the very ancient churches at Canterbury and Whithern to St. Martin; the many churches in Cornwall and Wales dedicated to St. Germanus; two churches in Glamorganshire dedicated to St. Lupus⁶.

⁸ Asserted by Archbishop Ussher on the authority of Sedulius, Works, iv. p. 248. The Roman Psalter is the first revision of the old Latin text made by Jerome c. A.D. 383, at the request of Pope Damasus. It was retained in use in Italy till the pontificate of Pius V (A.D. 1566), who introduced the Gallican Psalter generally, though the Roman Psalter was still allowed to be used in three Italian churches, 'in una Romae Vaticana ecclesia et extra urbem in Mediolanensi, et in ecclesia S. Marci Venetiis.' The Gallican Psalter is the second revision made by Jerome A.D. 387-391. In it he attempted to represent as far as possible, by the help of the Greek versions, the real reading of the Hebrew. It obtained its name from the fact that it was introduced from Rome in the public services of France by St. Gregory of Tours (573-595), and was only accepted south of the Alps at a much later date.

The above account is taken from Smith's Dict. of the Bible, vol. iii. p. 1698. It is the inverse of the account of the two versions given by Bede, so far as Pope Damasus is concerned, who died A.D. 384.

Anastasia. Her name also appears on Dec. 25 in the Liber S. Trinitatis, a fourteenth-century Irish Martyrology¹⁰; and also with that of St. Anas-tasia in the Sacramentary of Leo¹¹.

Whole passages, in addition to many isolated phrases, from the Gallican Liturgy appear in the Stowe Missal¹², and in the liturgical fragments in the Books of Deer, Dimma, and Mulling¹³.

The second and often-quoted question of St. Augustine to Gregory I, together with the papal answer, imply either the identity of the British and Gallican Liturgies, or that St. Augustine found the Gallican Rite in use in Britain; probably in the church of St. Martin at Canterbury, where Liudhard Bishop of Senlis, who had accompanied Queen Bertha from the court of Charibert at Paris, on her marriage with Ethelbert of Kent, would naturally have been using it.

Until a complete collation shall have been made of the Celtic text of the Old Testament it is impossible to verify or refute the inference drawn by Ussher from the doubtful authority of Sedulius. The materials for such a collation are indicated in H. and S., i. pp. 170-198. They seem to prove the existence of a special Celtic revision of the text of the Vetus Latina.

St. Augustine asked: 'Whereas the faith is one and the same, why are there different customs in different Churches, and why is one form of Mass observed in the holy Roman Church, and another in the Gallican Church?'

To which St. Gregory replied: 'You know, my brother, the custom of the Roman Church, in which you remember you were bred up. But it pleases me that if you have found anything either in the Roman, or the Gallican, or any other Church, which may be more acceptable to Almighty God, you carefully make choice of the same, and sedulously teach the Church of the English, which as yet is new in the faith, whatsoever you can gather from the several Churches. For things are not to be loved for the sake of places, but places for the sake of good things. Choose, therefore, from every Church those things which are pious, religious, and upright, and when you have, as it were, made them up into one body, let the minds of the English people be accustomed thereto¹.'

§ 7. SPANISH CONNECTION.—There are traces of a connection between the Celtic and Spanish Churches in the following facts:—

In A.D. 380 certain Priscillianist bishops were banished from Spain to the Scilly Islands².

The existence of a British See of Bretona in Galicia in N.W. Spain is alluded to in the Council of Lugo (Lucus Augusti), A.D. 569.

The Second Council of Braga, A.D. 572, is subscribed to by Mailoc, a British bishop, suffragan of Martin Archbishop of Braga.

² Sulpicius Severus, Hist. Sac. ii. 51.

There are traces of the prevalence in Spain of the British mode of calculating Easter c. A.D. 590¹.

The Fourth Council of Toledo, A.D. 633, can. 41, abolished a particular—probably the British—form of tonsure, said to have prevailed in Galicia, and to have caused an undesirable want of uniformity in Spain. It was subscribed by Metopius, a British bishop.

The signature of an 'Episcopus Britonensis,' sometimes with a Gothic sometimes with a Celtic name, is found appended to the Councils of Toledo VII, A.D. 646; Toledo VIII, A.D. 653; Braga IV, A.D. 675; Toledo XIII, A.D. 683; Toledo XVI, A.D. 693. Traces of the existence of this British See of Britona or Britonia (Sedes Britoniensis) are found in lists as late as A.D. 1156; but the See had become merged in or united with that of Montenedo or Oviedo A.D. 830.

Passages which are found likewise in the Mozarabic Liturgy are incorporated in Celtic liturgical fragments in the Books of Deer, Dimma, Mulling, and in the Stowe Missal².

§ 8. POINTS OF DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE ROMAN AND CELTIC CHURCH.—A consideration of the chief points of difference between the Roman and Celtic Churches will rather incline readers to agree with the old British historian³, and with St. Augustine of Canterbury⁴, that the British were in many respects hostile to Roman customs, than with the more accomplished modern author who says that no traces can be discovered of any permanent divergence between them in doctrine or practice⁵.

The chief points of divergence were these:—

1. The Calculation of Easter.—There was a difference between the Roman and Celtic Churches in determining the date of Easter, which, though intrinsically of an unessential nature, became the crucial point of controversy in the seventh century, being prominently insisted on by St. Augustine at the Bangor conference with the seven British bishops¹. Some points in connection with it have been already alluded to². The real state of the controversy and the important facts to be remembered are these,—that before the Council of Nice the practice of the British harmonised with that of the Roman Church, the most ancient Roman table for Easter agreeing with that of the British Church; but that owing to its isolation from the rest of Western Christendom, the Celtic Church had never adopted the various alterations and improvements which, on astronomical and not on theological grounds, had been from time to time accepted by the Continental Church³.

2. Baptism.—One of the conditions of union offered by St. Augustine to the British bishops was that of their consenting to administer baptism according to the custom of the Roman Church⁴. Bede does not inform his readers in what the difference between the two baptismal rites consisted, but it probably lay in one or more of the following points:—

(a) Single immersion.—The practice of immersion, as against affusion, is proved by the large size of still surviving fonts, such as the font of sixth-century workmanship found at St. Breacan's Bed⁵, and another of twelfth-century workmanship at Cashel, in the chapel of Cormac King of South Munster (1123–38)⁶. Single immersion was the custom 'in tota diocesi Macloviensi' in Brittany up to A.D. 1620⁷.

³ The various authorities for this statement are given in H. and S. i. 152, Appendix D, with a lucid summary of the whole controversy.

It prevailed in the sixth century in Spain, where Gregory I advised its retention under the peculiar circumstances in which the Spanish Church stood at that time with regard to Arianism¹, and where a British bishopric existed at that date². It is left optional in the three extant 'Ordines Baptismi' of the ancient Gallican Church³, while a rubric directing trine immersion is contained in the earliest Ordines Romani⁴. Trine immersion, with the alternative of aspersion, is ordered in the earliest extant Irish Baptismal Office, in the composition of which however Roman influence is strongly marked⁵.

(b) The omission of unction.—Lanfranc complained to Tirlagh, chief king of the Irish A.D. 1074, that the Irish baptized their infants without any chrism⁶; and St. Bernard asserted in the twelfth century that they omitted confirmation⁷. This almost incredible accusation of the disuse of confirmation is possibly based on the fact that unction was sometimes omitted in that rite as administered in the Celtic Church. Alcuin sent a present of some oil to a lector named Colcu in Ireland in the eighth century, and requested him to distribute it among the bishops because oil was scarce⁸, a fact which suggests that the occasional omission of unction may have been due to the difficulty of obtaining the necessary material. But if St. Bernard's exaggerated accusations were true of the Irish in the twelfth century they do not apply to an earlier date. St. Patrick, writing to the subjects of Coroticus c. A.D. 497, alludes to chrism, along with the sign of the cross and the white chrisom, as all connected with the baptismal rite⁹. The earliest extant Irish Baptismal Office—in the volume known as the Stowe Missal¹—enjoins three separate acts of unction:—

(i) At an early point in the service between the interrogations of the candidate: 'Deinde tanges pectus dorsum de oleo et crismate.'

(ii) Shortly before the act of Baptism: 'Incipit oleari oleo et crismate in pectus et item scabulas antequam baptizaretur.'

(iii) Immediately after Baptism: 'Postquam baptizaretur oleatur cresmate in cerebrum in fronte.' The personal formula following, with the vernacular rubric introducing it, is peculiar to the Stowe Missal².

Of these three rites, (i) is unrepresented in the present Roman Ordines Baptismi; (ii) is directed to be performed with the oil of the catechumens only; (iii) is performed somewhat differently: 'perungat verticem Electi in modum crucis' (Ordo Bapt. Adult.), 'ungit infantem in summitate capitis,' &c. (Ordo Bapt. Parvulor.)

(c) The 'Pedilavium,' or ceremonial washing of the feet after baptism³.

In connection with the subject it may be mentioned that one of the earliest Anglo-Saxon decrees, under Augustine, provided for the invocation of each Person of the Holy Trinity in Baptism. Pope Zachary writing to Boniface of Mentz A.D. 748 told him that the following canon on Baptism had been passed in England A.D. 597–603: 'Dinoscitur ut quicumque sine invocatione Trinitatis lotus fuisset, quod sacramentum regenerationis non haberet . . . In the anonymous Life of St. Bridget this passage occurs: 'Magus dormiens vidit duos clericos vestibus albis indutos effundere oleum super caput puellae, ordinem baptismi complentes consueto more.' Personam de Trinitate in baptismo non nominaret, illud baptismum esse non posset, quod pro certo verum est quia qui Unum ex sancta Trinitate confessus non fuerit perfectus Christianus esse non potest¹.

In describing the proceedings of the Synod of Cashel A.D. 1172 Benedict of Peterborough mentions the following curious facts: 'In illo autem concilio statuerunt, et auctoritate summi pontificis praeceperunt, pueros in ecclesia baptizari, In nomine Patris, et Filii, et Spiritus Sancti, et hoc a sacerdotibus fieri praeceperunt. Mos enim prius erat per diversa loca Hiberniae, quod statim cum puer nasceretur, pater ipsius vel quilibet alius eum ter mergeret in aqua. Et si divitis filius esset, ter mergeret in lacte².' Archbishop Theodore's doubts of the validity of British Baptism have been noticed³. If there was any reason for supposing that the abuses in Ireland in the twelfth century had any counterpart in England in the seventh century, they would have been justifiable. It is curious that the formula of Baptism is omitted in the Office preserved in the Stowe Missal⁴.

3. The Tonsure.—The Roman tonsure was formed by the top of the head being shaved close, and a circle or crown of hair left to grow around it. The Eastern tonsure, styled St. Paul's, was total. The Celtic tonsure consisted in shaving all the hair in front of a line drawn over the top of the head from ear to ear. The Roman party traced their form of tonsure to St. Peter, and attributed that of their opponents to Simon Magus. Abbot Ceolfrid discussed the subject at length in his letter to Nectan King of the Picts A.D. 710⁵.

The only allusion to Baptism in the eight canons of this Council which are extant is in the first, which orders its administration to take place in the font at church, implying that the laxer custom of baptizing in private houses was creeping in or had become prevalent. Although not brought forward by St. Augustine, this question of the tonsure (together with that of Easter) formed the subject of the most frequent and violent controversy in Britain during the seventh century. There are traces of the same controversy in France, where a Saxon colony at Bayeux had copied the Celtic tonsure from the Bretons before A.D. 590¹; and in Spain, where a tonsure like the Celtic was condemned by the fourth Council of Toledo².

4. The Ordinal.

(a) The Consecration of Bishops by a single Bishop.—In the Life of St. Kentigern it is related that he was consecrated to the episcopate by a single bishop who had been summoned from Ireland for that purpose, according to the custom of the Britons and Scots³. A similar fact is recorded in the legendary lives of the Welsh SS. David, Dubricius, Teilo, &c.⁴ There is a curious legend of the consecration of St. Columba by Bishop Etchain, who conferred on him priest's instead of bishop's orders by mistake⁵. Was this the flaw which caused Archbishop Theodore to suspect the imperfection of Celtic Orders⁶, and think it necessary to confirm the consecration of Chad to the see of York? That consecration had been performed by Wini Bishop of Winchester, assisted by two British bishops, A.D. 665⁷, but such assistance may have been regarded as valueless⁸. In Ireland the custom of single consecration still obtained in the eleventh century, and was complained of by St. Anselm writing to the Irish king Tirlagh, A.D. 1074, and by Lanfranc writing to King Muriardach, A.D. 1100¹. It is strange that such a custom should have prevailed in the British Church, as three of its bishops had been present and had subscribed to the canons of the Council of Arles, A.D. 314, which ordered that at least three, and if possible seven, bishops should take part in every episcopal consecration².

(b) The Lessons of Scripture used in the British Ordinal differed from those in use in other Western Ordinals. Their variations are exhibited in the following table:—

St. Gregory, in his celebrated answers to St. Augustine, distinctly recognised the validity of consecration by single bishops in case of necessity, and authorised and commissioned him to consecrate single-handed. ² 'Ut sine tribus episcopis nullus episcopus ordinetur. De his qui usurpant sibi quod soli debeant episcopos ordinare, placuit ut nullus hoc sibi præsumat nisi assumptis secum septem aliis episcopis: si tamen non potuerit septem infra tres non audeat ordinare.' Mansi, Conc. tom. ii. p. 474. can. xx.

(c) The anointing of the hands of deacons and priests at ordination. This custom, together with the above use of lections, is vouched for by the contemporaneous authority of Gildas: 'Recurrere tandem aliquando usque ad lectiones illas, quae ad hoc non solum ut recitentur, sed etiam adstipulentur benedictioni, qua initiantur sacerdotum vel ministrorum manus,' &c.¹

The earliest extant formula for such unction is found in the Pontifical of the Anglo-Saxon Egbert Archbishop of York (732-766), and runs as follows² :—

'AD ORDINANDOS PRESBITEROS.

(1) Consecratio Manus.

(2) Benedic, Domine, et sanctifica has manus sacerdotis tui Ill. ad consecrandas hostias quae pro delictis atque neglegentiis populi offeruntur, et ad cetera benedicenda quae ad usus populi necessaria sunt; et praesta, quaesumus, ut quaecunque benedixerint benedicentur, et quaecunque sacrauerint sacrentur, Saluator mundi, qui uiuis et regnas.

(3) Faciens crucem sanctam de chrismate in manibus eius (uel eorum) et dicis:

(4) Consecrentur manus istae, quaesumus, Domine, et sanctificentur; per istam sanctam unctionem et nostram inuocationem, adque diuinam benedictionem, ut quodquod benedixerint sit benedictum, et quodquod sanctificauerint sit sanctificatum. Per.

(5) Consecratio capitis oleo.

tione in ordine sacerdotali, in nomine Patris, et Filii, et Spiritus Sancti. Amen.

Presp. Et cum Spiritu tuo.'

In the ordination of deacons in the same Pontifical¹ there is the following rubric and collect:—

(7) 'Consecratio manuum Diaconi de oleo sancto et chrisma.

(8) Consecrentur manus, iste, quaesumus Domine, et sanctificentur per istam unctionem, ut quaecunque benedixerint benedicta sint, et quaecunque sanctificauerint sanctificata sint.'

(1) and (4) are found in the Gregorian Sacramentary²; not in the Gelasian; and in three ninth-century Gallican Sacramentaries³.

The rubric and formula for the unction of the hands in the consecration of priests, in the present Roman Pontifical, are as follows:—

'Pontifex cum oleo catechumenorum inungit unicuique ambas manus, simul junctas, in modum crucis, producendo cum pollice suo dextero in dictum oleum intincto duas lineas, videlicet, a pollice dexteræ manus usque ad indicem sinistrae, et a pollice sinistrae usque ad indicem dexteræ, ungendo mox totaliter palmas, dicens, dum quemlibet inungit:

Consecrare et sanctificare digneris, Domine, manus istas per istam unctionem et nostram benedictionem. R. Amen.

Pontifex producit manu dextera signum crucis super manus illius, quem ordinat, et prosequitur:

Ut quaecunque benedixerint benedicantur, et quaecunque consecrauerint consecrentur et sanctificentur in nomine Domini nostri Jesu Christi. Amen⁴.'

⁴ There is a passage in a letter from Pope Nicolas I (858–867) to Rodolph Archbishop of Bourges, asserting that the anointing of the hands was not then in use in the Roman Church in the ordination either of priests or deacons: 'Seiscitaris utrum solis presbyteris an et diaconibus debeant cum ordinantur manus chrismatis liquore perungi; quod in sancta hac Romana, cui Deo auctore

The anointing of the hands at the ordination of deacons [(7) and (8)] is not found in any form of the Roman Ordinal, ancient or modern, nor in any Gallican Ordinal¹. It is found in the Anglo-Saxon Ordinals of St. Dunstan², of Egbert³, of Bec⁴; and is asserted by Martene to have been a peculiarity of the Anglo-Saxon Church⁵. With the passage of Gildas in view⁶, it seems a safe inference that it was imported into the Anglo-Saxon Ordinal from the more ancient forms of the British Church.

A similar inference has been drawn with reference to the following points, but with less certainty, as there is no passage of Gildas, or other Celtic author, which can be produced to throw light on the earlier British practice.

(d) The Prayer at the giving of the stole to deacons at Ordination:—

‘In nomine sanctae Trinitatis et unice divinitatis accipe stolam quam tibi Dominus per humilitatis nostrae famulatum, seu per manus nostras, accipiendam praeparavit; per quam scias sarcinam Domini Dei tui cervicibus tuis impositam, et ad humilitatem atque ministrationem te esse connexum, et per quam te cognoscant fratres tui ministrum Dei esse ordinatum, ut qui in diaconatus ministerio es constitutus, leuitice benedictionis ordine clarescas, et spiritali conversatione praeulgens gratia sanctificationis eluceas; sed et in Christo Jesu firmus et stabilis perseveres, quatenus hoc quod per hanc stolam significatur in die districti iudicii ante tribunal Domini siue macula representare ualeas; ipso auxiliante cui est honor et gloria in saecula saeculorum. Amen.’

deservimus, ecclesia, neutris agitur.’ Martene expresses his astonishment at this passage. Certainly Amalarius (ob. 837), writing some years previously, had asserted the custom in the case of the ordination of priests: ‘Hunc morem tenent episcopi nostri; manus presbyterorum ungunt de oleo.’ De Div. Off. lib. ii. c. 13. Rodolph and Amalarius were familiar with Gallican, and perhaps also with Anglo-Saxon Ritual.

This prayer is found in the Winchester Pontifical¹, and in the English Pontificals of Egbert² and St. Dunstan at Paris³, and in that of Jumièges⁴, but not in any other Western ordinals.

This rite, which is now in general use in the Roman Church, is not found in any of the Ordines Romani in the Western Pontificals prior to A. D. 1000, except in the above-mentioned Pontificals of the Anglo-Saxon Church. The words with which it is there accompanied are these:—

‘Postea tradat ei episcopus sanctum euangelium, dicens :

*Accipe illud uolumen Euangelii. Lege, et intellige, et aliis trade, et tu opere adimple.*⁵’

It is not mentioned by the early ritualists St. Isidore, Amalarius, or Alcuin. It must therefore have been imported from England into France⁶, and through France into the rest of Western Christendom,—and from what other source is the Anglo-Saxon Church likely to have obtained it except from the ancient Celtic Church which preceded it?

(f) Rite of investing priests with a stole at ordination.

This rite is not mentioned in the Gelasian or Gregorian Sacramentaries, nor in any of the earlier Western Rituals collected by Martene, who conjectures that its absence is due to the fact that the stole had already been given to the deacon at ordination⁷. But the rite does appear in the Office for the Ordination of Priests in the English Pontificals before mentioned, whence it probably spread, like the Delivery of the Gospels, into the rest of Western Christendom. The Pontifical of Egbert contains the following directions:—

'Presbyter cum ordinatur, circumdantur humeri eius cum stola ab episcopo¹.

Quando datur stola Presbytero.

Stola(m) iustitiae circumdet Dominus cervicem tuam et ab omni corruptione peccati purificet Dominus mentem tuam².'

The same reason exists as in (c) for supposing a Celtic origin for this rite.

5. Peculiar mode of consecrating Churches and Monasteries.

(a) Celtic Churches as a rule, to which those of St. Martin and of the 'Quatuor Coronati'³ at Canterbury and that of St. Martin at Whithern must be considered exceptions, were not named after departed saints, but after their living founders. On one occasion Archbishop Theodore supplied an Anglo-Roman dedication to the wooden cathedral which had been built some fourteen years previously at Lindisfarne by the Celtic Bishop Finan. Bede narrates how (A.D. 651) 'Aidan, the Bishop, having departed this life, Finan, who was ordained and sent by the Scots, succeeded him in the bishopric, and built a cathedral church in the isle of Lindisfarne; nevertheless after the manner of the Scots, he made it not of stone, but of hewn oak, and covered it with reeds; and the same was afterwards dedicated in honour of St. Peter the Apostle by the most reverend Archbishop Theodore⁴.' The dedications of Celtic churches may be divided into two classes, those to native saints before the existence of the Anglo-Saxon

'Accipe jugum Domini: jugum enim ejus suave est et onus ejus leve.'

⁴ Bede, H. E. iii. 25. We are indebted to this Celtic custom of dedicating churches to their living founders or consecrators for the preservation of many saints' names, especially in Cornwall.

Church, those to saints in the 'Anglo-Saxon or Roman Calendar imposed at a later date¹. Sometimes the earlier dedication lingered on in use by the Celtic population, side by side with the later one, as in the case of 'St. Elider and St. James,' 'St. Beuno and St. Michael,' 'St. Dogmael and St. Thomas' &c. in Wales; 'St. Mawnanus and St. Stephen,' 'St. Manacus and St. Dunstan,' 'St. Meran and St. Thomas a Becket' in Cornwall.

(b) The consecration of a church or monastery was preceded by a long fast. Bishop Cedd of the East Saxons (653-664) told Æthelwald, King of Deira, that 'it was the custom of those from whom he had learned a rule of regular discipline that they should first consecrate with prayer and fasting those places which had been newly obtained for founding a monastery or church.' Accordingly he fasted 'for the whole forty days of Lent,' and the exercise of fasting and prayer being completed he built a monastery, which is now called Lavington, and established it with religious customs, according to the practice of Lindisfarne, where he had been educated².

6. The Liturgy and the Ritual of the Mass.

The surviving fragments of the Celtic Liturgy have been put together in ch. iii, and the information which can be gleaned about its ritual is contained in ch. ii. It will therefore be sufficient to group together here certain passages which supply historical evidence of the existence of a Liturgy, other than the Roman, in these islands.

In England and Wales.—The use of a Liturgy here, certainly different from the Roman, and either identical with or very like the Gallican Liturgy, is an inference from the second of the questions put by Augustine to Gregory I, and from that

² Bede, H. E. iii. 23. The detail with which Bede records the above facts implies that he thought this mode of consecration unusual and deserving of special mention.

Pope's reply¹. It is strengthened by the language in which Augustine addressed the British bishops at the Synod of Bangor: 'In many respects you act in a manner contrary to our customs, and indeed to those of the Universal Church; and yet if you will obey me in these three things; to celebrate Easter at the proper time; to perform the office of baptism, in which we are born again to God, according to the custom of the Holy Roman and Apostolic Church; and to join us in preaching the word of God to the English people (Anglorum genti), we will tolerate *all your other customs, though contrary to our own*².' The last clause almost certainly includes a difference of Liturgy, which however Augustine had previously received instructions from Gregory not to elevate into a casus belli.

Gildas c. A.D. 570 had asserted a difference between the British and Roman Liturgies in these words: 'The Britons are at variance with the whole world, and are opposed to Roman customs, not only in the Mass, but also in their tonsure³.'

The Council of Clovesho, A.D. 747, can. xiii, ordered the general adoption of Roman Sacramental usages throughout the English dioceses: 'Tertio decimo definitur decreto: Ut uno eodemque modo Dominicae dispensationis in carne sacrosanctae festivitates, in omnibus ad eas rite competentibus rebus, id est, in Baptismi officio, in Missarum celebratione, in cantilenae modo celebrantur, juxta exemplar videlicet quod scriptum de Romana habemus Ecclesia. Itemque ut per gyrum totius anni natalitia sanctorum uno eodemque die, juxta martyrologium ejusdem Romanae Ecclesiae, cum sua sibi convenienti psalmodio seu cantilena venerentur⁴.'

This passage proves that in A.D. 747 the Roman Liturgy was only in partial, not in universal use in England. Possibly the Gregorian Canon had been introduced in some places without the whole service having been assimilated to the Roman type, as is concluded, from an examination of the old Gallican Liturgies, to have been the case in France¹.

The Irish Catalogue of the Saints, A.D. 750, asserts that a British Liturgy, different from St. Patrick's, had been introduced into Ireland, in the latter half of the sixth century, by St. David, St. Cadoc, and Gildas².

At the close of the eighth century the Scottish Liturgy was said to be still in daily use in the church of York, and Alcuin writing from France (790-800) urged Archbishop Eanbald to abolish it, just as Charles the Great, in 789, had ordered the Roman rite to be substituted everywhere in France for the old Gallican Liturgy³.

In Ireland.—The following account of the origin of the Scottish (=Irish) Liturgy, and of the British (after A.D. 429) assumed to be the same, tracing it through Germanus and Lupus to St. Mark and distinguishing it from the Gallican, was drawn up by some foreign Scoto-Irish monk probably in the eighth century:—

The conjectural emendations of Spelman (Concil. i. 167) have been incorporated in the text, so far as is necessary to make it grammatical, and where possible intelligible. The evidence of this confusing document, so far as it is worth anything, asserts the original Irish Liturgy used by St. Patrick to have been neither Roman, nor Gallican, but Alexandrian. In this respect it is an isolated statement, unsupported by any other evidence.

Cursus Gallorum.—Inde postea relatione beati Photini martyris, cum quadraginta et octo martiribus retrusi in ergastulum, relatione ad beatum Clementem IV loci successorem beati Petri Apostoli deportaverunt, et beatum Irenaeum Episcopum beatus Clemens ordinavit. Hoc in libro sancti ipsius Irenaei, Episcopi et martiris, reperies. Edoctus a beato Polycarpo Smyrnaeorum Episcopo et martyre, qui fuit discipulus Johannis Apostoli, sicut refert Historiographus Josephus, et Irenaeus Episcopus, in suo libro.

Johannes Evangelista primum cursum Gallorum decantavit; inde postea beatus Polycarpus discipulus Sancti Johannis; inde postea Irenaeus qui fuit Episcopus Lugdunensis Gallei, tertius ipse, ipsum cursum decantaverunt in Galleis. Inde per diversorum prudentium virorum, et modulationibus, series Scripturarum Novi ac Veteris Testamenti diversorum prudentium virorum paginis, non de propriis sed de sacris Scripturis, reciproca, antiphonas, et responsus seu sonus, et alleluyas composuerunt; et per universum mundum peragravit, atque per universum orbem terrarum Ecclesiae ordo cursus Gallorum diffusus est. Quem beatus Hieronimus presbiter, et Germanus et Lupus Episcopi, Pelagianam haeresim (non sicut multi opinantur et Gallicanus quidam clericus Britto modulatione deditus, quod ipsum edidisset, quod non fecit) quod beatus Hieronimus presbiter, Germanus et Lupus, Pelagianam haeresim vel Gallianam (quae nomen ipsius titulatur) ex Britannis et Scotiis provinciis expulerunt.

Cursus Scottorum.—Unde et alium cursum, qui dicitur praesenti tempore Scottorum, quae sit opinione, jactatur. Sed beatus Marcus Evangelista, sicut refert Josephus et Eusebius in libro quarto, totum Aegyptum vel Italiam taliter praedicaverunt sicut unam Ecclesiam, ut omnis sanctus, vel Gloria in Excelsis Deo, vel Oratione Dominica, et Amen, universi tam viri quam foeminae decantarent. Tanta fuit sua praedicatio unita, et postea Evangelium ex ore Petri Apostoli edidit.

ipsum Gregorius Nanzianzenus, quem Hieronimus suum magistrum esse affirmat. Et beatus Basilius, frater ipsius sancti Gregorii, Antonius, Paulus, Macarius, vel Johannes et Malchus, secundum ordinem Patrum decantaverunt.

Inde postea beatissimus Cassianus, qui Limerensi monasterio beatum Honorium habuit comparem. Et post ipsum beatus Honoratus primus abba, et sanctus Caesarius Episcopus qui fuit in Arelata, et beatus Porcarius abbas, qui in ipso monasterio fuit, ipsum cursum decantaverunt, qui beatum Lupum et beatum Germanum monachos in eorum monasterio habuerunt. Et ipsi sub normam reguli ipsum cursum ibidem decantaverunt, et postea in Episcopatus cathedra summi honoris, pro reverentia sanctitatis eorum, sunt adepti. Et postea in Britannis vel Scotiis praedicaverunt, quae Vita Germani Episcopi Autisiodorensis, et Vita beati Lupi affirmant. Qui beatum Patricium spiritaliter litteras sacras docuerunt atque innutrierunt, et ipsum Episcopum pro eorum praedicatione Archiepiscopum in Scotiis et Britannis posuerunt; qui vixit annos CLIII, et ipsum cursum ibidem decantavit.

Et post ipsum beatus Wandilochus senex, et beatus Gomogillus, qui habuerunt in eorum monasterio monachos circiter tria millia.

Inde beatus Wandilochus in praedicationis ministerium a beato Gomogillo missus est, et beatus Columbanus, partibus Galliarum; destinati sunt Luxogilum monasterium, et ibidem ipsum cursum decantaverunt.

Et inde postea percrebuit forma sanctitatis eorum per universum orbem terrarum, et multa coenobia ex eorum doctrina, tam virorum quam puellarum, sunt congregata.

Et postea inde sumpsit exordium sub beato Columbano, quod ante beatus Marcus Evangelista decantavit. Et si nos non creditis, inquire in Vita beati Columbani et beati Eustacii abbatis; plenius invenietis, et dicta beati Athleti abbatis Edbovensis.

Cursus alius Orientalis.—Est alius cursus Orientalis a sancto

Cromacio, et Eliodoro, et beato Paulino, seu Athanasio Episcopo editus, qui in Gallorum consuetudine non habetur; quem sanctus Macarius decantavit, hoc est, per duodenas, hoc est, unaquaeque ora.

Cursus S. Ambrosii.—Est et alius cursus, quem refert beatus Augustinus Episcopus, quem beatus Ambrosius papa propter haereticorum ordinem dissimilem composuit, qui in Italia antea decantabatur.

Cursus S. Benedicti.—Est et alius cursus beati Benedicti, qui ipsum singulariter paucis discordante a cursu Romano; in sua regula repperies scriptum. Sed tamen beatus Gregorius, urbis Romae pontifex, quasi privilegium monachis, ipsum sua auctoritate in Vita S. Benedicti in libro Dialogorum affirmavit; ubi dixit, “Non aliter sanctus vir docere poterat, nisi sicut ipse beatus Benedictus vixit.”

Another document, drawn up about the middle of the eighth century, is entitled ‘Catalogus Sanctorum Hiberniae secundum diversa tempora.’ It is believed to be the work of Tirechan, the author of the Annotations on the Life of St. Patrick in the Book of Armagh. It gives the following information, which is generally accepted as historical:—

‘A. D. 440 (?)–534. The first order of Catholic saints was in the time of Patricius; and then they were all bishops, famous and holy, and full of the Holy Ghost; 350 in number, founders of churches. They had one head, Christ; and one chief, Patricius; they observed one mass, one celebration, one tonsure from ear to ear. They celebrated one Easter, on the fourteenth moon after the vernal equinox; and what was excommunicated by one Church, all excommunicated. They rejected not the services and society of women¹; because founded on the Rock of Christ, they feared not the blast of temptation. This order of saints continued for four reigns. All these bishops were sprung from the Romans, and Franks, and Britons, and Scots.

¹ According to another MS., ‘They excluded from the churches neither laymen nor women.’

'A.D. 534-572. The second order was of Catholic presbyters. For in this order there were few bishops, and many presbyters, in number 300. They had one head, our Lord. They celebrated different masses, and had different rules; one Easter, on the fourteenth moon after the equinox; one tonsure, from ear to ear; they refused the services of women, separating them from the monasteries. This order has hitherto lasted for four reigns. They received a mass from Bishop David, and Gillas and Docus, the Britons.

'A.D. 572-666. The third order of saints was of this sort:—They were holy presbyters and a few bishops; 100 in number; who dwelt in desert places, and lived on herbs and water, and the alms; they shunned private property; they had different rules and masses, and different tonsures, for some had the coronal, and others the hair [behind]; and a different Paschal festival. For some celebrated the Resurrection on the fourteenth moon or on the sixteenth, with hard intentions. These lived during four reigns, and continued to that great mortality¹ [A.D. 666].'

In Scotland.—There are no historical documents extant about the character of the ancient Scottish Liturgy. The existence of such a Liturgy is proved by the character of the solitary fragment in the Book of Deer²; by the frequent Liturgical and Ritual allusions in the works of Adamnan and other writers of the Celtic Church in Scotland; by the account of the steps taken by Queen Margaret to get it abolished in the eleventh century³. St. Serf is said in the Aberdeen Breviary to have lived 'sub forma et ritu primitivæ Ecclesiæ⁴.' When Palladius arrived in Scotland he is said to have found persons 'habentes fidei doctores et sacramentorum ministros presbiteros et monachos, prima-

CHAPTER II.

CELTIC RITUAL.

It is proposed in this chapter to lay before the reader such information as can be gathered both directly and incidentally about the structure and decoration of Celtic churches, the dress and ornaments of the clergy, and the ritual of the service performed by them. The sources from which such information is forthcoming have been generally summed up in the Preface, and will be more particularly specified in foot-notes.

§ 1. CHURCHES. Of Earth.—Celtic churches were occasionally and at a very early date constructed of earth. In Tirechan's Annotations on the Life of St. Patrick it is stated, that 'when Patrick went to the place which is called Foirrgea of the sons of Awley, to divide it among the sons of Awley, he built there a quadrangular church of earth, because wood was not near at hand¹.'

Of Wood.—Where however wood could be obtained it was generally employed, so much so, that the custom of the Irish to use wood for building obtained for it in the middle ages the title of 'mos Scottorum,' 'opus Scoticum,' 'the Scottish style.'

The church of St. Derbhfraich, near Clogher, in Tyrone (fifth century), was a wooden structure². So was that of St. Ciaran of Saighir, in the same century³.

In the sixth century St. Monenna 'founded a monastery, which was made of smooth planks according to the fashion of the Scottish nation, who were not accustomed to erect stone walls or to get them erected¹. St. Columba's church at Derry was built of timber and wattling².

In the seventh century St. Kevin (Coemgen) built his oratory of rods of wood³; St. Gobban, a famous builder, constructed a wooden church for St. Mulling⁴. It is told of St. Mochaio, abbot of Nendrum, that on one occasion he went with sevenscore young men to cut wattles to make his church⁵.

In the ninth century the Annals of Ulster record a hurricane which occurred on the festival of St. Martin, and which prostrated a great many trees in the woods, and carried the churches (DIURTHEACHS) from their places⁶.

In the twelfth century the custom of building churches of wood was still continued in Ireland, as appears from St. Bernard's notice of a church built by Malachy Archbishop of Armagh⁷.

The same custom prevailed in other portions of the Celtic Church. In Scotland St. Ninian's church among the Southern Picts, at the end of the fourth or beginning of the fifth century obtained its name of Candida Casa from the very unusual circumstance that it was built of stone, the use of which material for building purposes was not customary at that date⁸.

St. Adamnan implies that the first buildings at Iona, including the church, were of wood¹.

Early in the eighth century, Nectan king of the Picts sent into England for builders in stone, after that Benedict Biscop had introduced there the Roman custom of employing this more durable material².

In the Northumbrian Church, Finan, who had been a monk at Iona, and who succeeded Aidan as bishop of Lindisfarne A.D. 651, 'built a church fit for an episcopal see, not of stone, but altogether of sawn wood covered with reeds after the Scotie fashion³.'

In England, the buildings at Glastonbury, as they existed in the British Church, before the Anglo-Saxon refoundation of that monastery in the seventh century, were, according to tradition, of wood⁴.

In Wales, when St. Kentigern founded his monastery of St. Asaph, in the sixth century, he built the church of dressed wood, 'after the manner of the Britons, since they were not yet either accustomed or able to build with stone⁵.' St. Gwynllyw, at the close of the same century, is recorded to have built a cemetery chapel of wood⁶.

On the Continent, when the great Celtic missionary St. Columbanus received from the king of the Lombards a site for his church and monastery at Bobbio A.D. 615, he was said to have been supernaturally assisted in procuring the wood necessary for that purpose¹.

Of Stone.—Stone buildings, though not the general rule, were by no means unknown throughout this period. The remains of rude oratories of uncemented stone still survive in Ireland, either like the oratory of Gallerus, of a date antecedent to the mission of St. Patrick, or like that of Crumtherim, coeval with him, or, as in the case of the church of St. Kienan (Cianan, Kenan), built by his disciples². Stone began to be universally adopted in Ireland for building purposes after the first irruption of the Danes, A.D. 794, and the consequent transfer of the monastic establishment of Iona to Kells, A.D. 814.

In Scotland, it has been noticed that St. Ninian's church at Candida Casa, c. A.D. 400, was a stone structure. There are remains of a stone chapel of St. Medan, an Irish virgin and a disciple of St. Ninian, at Kirkmaiden on the Bay of Luce in Wigtonshire, similar to remains found in Cornwall and Brittany. There are also in the same neighbourhood stones, sepulchral slabs, &c., with representations of crosses, animals of interlaced work of Hiberno-British character, like the single stones found in Ireland, and described in detail by Mr. Petrie³.

It must not be inferred that the use of wooden buildings was confined to the Celtic race. Such work in France was known as 'opus Gallicum,' in contradiction to stone-work, 'opus Romanense.' It is described in Italia Monumenta Historiae Patriae, vol. i, Edict. Reg. Langobard. App. xi. p. 245. In Anglo-Saxon times King Edwin (616-633) built a wooden church at Tynemouth ; there was a 'monasterium ligneum' in the same town, rebuilt by St. Oswald in stone. The wooden cathedral at Chester-le-Street remained till A.D. 1042. Lelandi Collect. vol. iv. p. 43. The first church of St. Peter at York, A.D. 627, was 'de ligno.' Bede, H. E. ii. 14. enumerated and described at length by Messrs. Haddan and Stubbs exhibit Romano-British stone or brickwork¹.

An examination of these ruins points to the small dimensions of these primitive churches, and this inference is corroborated by early testimony. Sixty feet was the length of the Great Church of St. Patrick at Teltown in Meath²; one hundred feet that of the first cathedral at Armagh, c. A.D. 445³. But larger churches soon rose. The Annals of Ulster record the burning of two hundred and sixty persons in a wooden church A.D. 849. The following is the description of St. Bridget's church at Kildare, in her life by Cogitosus:—

in the banquet of the body and blood of Jesus Christ. But another partition, dividing the pavement of the house into two equal parts, extends from the eastern (western?) side to the transverse partition lying across the breadth. Moreover the church has in it many windows, and one ornamented doorway on the right side, through which the priests and the faithful of the male sex enter the church, and another doorway on the left side, through which the congregation of virgins and faithful women are accustomed to enter. And thus in one very great temple, a multitude of people, in different order and ranks, and sex and situation, separated by partitions, in different order but with one mind worship Almighty God¹.

The remains of Bishop Conlaeth referred to in this extract were disinterred and enshrined A.D. 799. Cogitosus describes the windows as 'numerous' and the walls as 'covered with mural paintings.' This points to a date at least as late as the eighth century, for Bede assigns the first introduction of glass and painting into England A.D. 676 to Benedict Biscop, and he had to bring glaziers from Gaul²; unless Dr. O'Connor³ is right in seeing in Cogitosus' work only a proof of the early and more advanced state of art in Ireland, or unless Mr. Petrie is right in laying stress on the fact that there is no mention of glass in these windows, which may have been only apertures⁴.

The ornamentation of the church need not cause surprise, for there are extant elaborately-worked gold, silver, and bronze utensils and ornaments recently discovered in Ireland, and undoubtedly belonging to a still earlier date. See the description of silver flagons and cups with interlaced and triangular ornamentation found near Coleraine A.D. 1854, and assigned to a date 400–600 B.C. in the Ulster Journal of Archæology, vol. ii. p. 182.

The surviving architectural remains are a proof of the number of Celtic churches which must at one time have existed. As far as England alone is concerned, there is the direct testimony of the British historian Gildas, who speaks of the multitude of churches destroyed in England during the Diocletian persecution¹ (A.D. 305–313), and again during the invasions of the heathen Saxons in the sixth century². Further details of Irish churches and oratories will be found in Dr. Petrie's Ecclesiastical Architecture of Ireland, p. 186, and of Scottish churches in the Proceedings of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, ii. 517.

Certain main features deserve to be further dwelt upon.

Screens.—There appears to have been in early Celtic churches a substantial screen with doors in it, separating the chancel from the nave. This is implied in Cogitosus' description of St. Bridget's church (p. 89), and is stated in a fifteenth-century Gaelic MS. Life of St. Columba preserved in the Advocates' Library at Edinburgh, and translated in Mr. Skene's Celtic Scotland, vol. ii. p. 500.

Altars.—British churches at the beginning of the fourth century had more than one altar. This is inferred from the expressions of Gildas, 'inter altaria' (p. 72), 'inter ipsa sacrosancta altaria' (p. 37). The altar was called 'coelestis sacrificii sedes' (p. 37). It stood at the east end of the church³. It was sometimes made of wood, as in the case of the altar in the church of St. Bridget⁴; sometimes of stone. Gildas alludes to the stone altars of British churches¹. A stone altar is mentioned as having been discovered by St. Patrick in a cave, a possible proof of the existence of Christians in Ireland before the arrival of that saint²; and stone altars of the Celtic period have been found on the island of Ardoilan, six miles from the coast of Orney, on the site of the antique monastery of St. Fechin³; in the oratory of St. Molaise at Inismurray⁴; at Temple Molaga, with two stone candlesticks close to it⁴; in the oratory of St. Piran at Perranzabuloe in Cornwall⁵; and in that of St. Michael at Penkivel in the same county⁶.

Vestry.—There was frequently an outside vestry attached to the church, 'exedra' or 'exedriola⁷,' where the sacred vessels were kept, and which served for the other purposes of a sacristy.

Bells.—Each church had its bell, 'clocca' or 'campana,' used for summoning the congregation together for the divine offices⁸. The bells of St. Columba and St. Ninian, the former being possibly the very bell alluded to by St. Adamnan, are still in existence in the collection made by the late Mr. John Bell of Dungannon. Pictures of them, with minute description and measurements, are given in Stuart's *Sculptured Stones of Scotland*⁹, Wilson's *Archæology of Scotland*¹⁰, *Archæologia Scotica*¹¹. A similar bell was found six hundred years ago in the ruins of Bangor Abbey, of which there is a woodcut in the *Ulster Journal of Archæology*¹². There is a handbell in the hands of a very ancient sculptured figure of an ecclesiastic¹. A 'campanarius' is mentioned in the list of various persons who formed the household of St. Patrick, who is also said to have given fifty bells to the churches of Connaught². St. Fillan's bell, with its possibly phallic ornamentation, and with an account of the superstitious usages with which till lately it has been connected, is described in the Proceedings of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland³. Small quadrangular hand-bells of great age, very similar in construction to the Irish type of workmanship, have been found in Wales: an account of one dug up on the site of the oratory of St. Cenan, and of another formerly preserved in the church of Llangwynodd, is given in the *Archæologia Cambrensis*⁴. Various ancient Irish bells still exist, of which the earliest is perhaps that of St. Patrick. A description of it has been published by Dr. Reeves⁵.

A short account of the ancient bells of other Celtic saints is given by Professor Westwood⁶. St. Mogue's bell and three others are figured in the Proceedings of the Society of Antiquaries of London⁷, where Mr. Franks describes them as presumably 'hand-bells used by the early missionaries and eremitical bishops of the British Church to summon their followers to prayer.' They were kept either in the vestry, or in those round towers both of Scotland and Ireland which were so long a puzzle to antiquaries, but which are believed by some persons to have been belfries, as well perhaps as repositories for relics, books, and other valuables⁸.

Strange miracles sometimes attested the sanctity of these bells, as in the case of the construction of a 'ferrea campana et quadrata suae ecclesiae pernecessaria' by St. Molocus¹, and of the bell which followed St. Ternan day by day all the way from Rome to Scotland². They were also used, as well as pastoral staves, in the administration of oaths³.

Churchyards.—In close proximity to the British church, then as now, was the churchyard, in the midst of which was planted the emblematic evergreen yew-tree. Many of the trees now standing date from the British period. The yew-tree at Aldworth, Berks, was examined A.D. 1841, and then concluded to be 1377 years old; i.e. it must have been planted c. A.D. 464, shortly after the preaching of St. Germanus against the Pelagian heresy. Crowhurst yew in Surrey is said to be 1450 years, and the yews at Fountains Abbey are of great antiquity⁴. Giraldus Cambrensis noticed the abundance and age of yews in Ireland, especially in churchyards and cemeteries⁵.

Sacrafaice¹, Sacrificium², Sacrificale mysterium³, Viaticum⁴.

The word 'sacrificium' was used equally for that which was offered to God, and for that which was given to and received by the communicant. St. Gall told his scholar Magnoaldus, 'My master Columbanus is accustomed to offer unto the Lord the sacrifice of salvation in brazen vessels⁵.' The twelfth canon of the synod of St. Patrick runs thus: 'He who deserveth not to receive the sacrifice in his life, how can it benefit him after his death⁶?' St. Patrick said to the newly-baptized virgin daughters of Laoghaire, 'Ye cannot see the face of Christ except ye taste of death, and except ye receive the sacrifice. And they answered, Give us the sacrifice, that we may behold the Son, our Spouse. And they received the Eucharist of God and they slept in death⁷.' The two words 'communion and sacrifice' are frequently used together in one phrase in the *Leabhar Breac*⁸.

To celebrate the Holy Eucharist was expressed by *Offerre*⁹, *Sacra offerre*¹⁰, *Offerre sacrificium*¹¹, *Christi corpus conficere*¹², *Eucharistiae celebrare mysteria*¹³, Sacra Eucharistiae mysteria

§ 3. MULTIPLICITY OF COLLECTS.—A peculiar feature of the Celtic Liturgy, at least in its Irish form, was a multiplicity of collects. A synod was held at Matiscon (Macon) in Gaul A.D. 623, to consider the charges brought by a certain monk Agrestius against the Rule of St. Columban.

Mabillon gives a full account of the controversy, and mentions, after several trivial objections brought by Agrestius, the following more important one, that the Irish differed from the ritual and rule of other Churches, and celebrated the Holy Eucharist with great variation and multiplication of collects and prayers¹⁴.

Eustasius, the disciple and successor of Columbanus in the monastery of Luxovium (Luxeuil), admitted the charge, but pleaded in defence the general acceptableness of all prayer before God.

It is impossible to decide with certainty to what Agrestius referred in his charge. Benedict XIV interpreted it of the substitution of several collects for the one collect which ordinarily precedes the Epistle in the Roman Missal, and which is thus referred to in one of the opening rubrics in the Gregorian Sacramentary: 'Postmodum dicitur oratio, deinde sequitur Apostolus'¹⁵. Sanctum quondam Columbanum accusavit Agrestinus (Agrestius?) quod contra Ecclesiae morem plures in Missa Orationes recitaret, quem egregie defendit Eustasius,' &c.¹

But why should not the charge of Agrestius have referred to the existence of other, and to the Roman worshipper unknown collects, which are found in the Gallican and Mozarabic Liturgies, and to which Alex. Lesleus, writing a Latin Preface to his edition of the latter Liturgy, refers thus: 'Tum sacerdos, in utraque Liturgia (i.e. Gallicana et Mozarabica) populum salutatur, et ad altare accedens, septem illas solemnes orationes, quibus liturgiae Gallicana, Gotho-Hispana, et Mozarabica praecipue constant, et ab aliis quibuscunque distinguuntur, devote recitabat,' i.e. (i) Praefatio Missae, (ii) alia oratio, (iii) post nomina, (iv) ad pacem, (v) Contestatio aut Immolatio Missae aut Illatio, (vi) post mysterium aut post pridie, (vii) Dominica oratio cui brevis oratio praemittitur, ante orationem Dominicam Gallis dicta, et subsequitur alia, quae iisdem post orationem Dominicam nominatur²?

Dr. O'Connor commenting on this point says, 'This multiplicity of prayers is expressly mentioned by Columbanus himself in his Rule, c. 7³.' But on reference to that Rule it is found that St. Columbanus is not speaking of the Liturgy at all, but of petitions in the form of versicles inserted in the Day-hours of the Divine Office⁴.

§ 4. THE LORD'S PRAYER.—The Lord's Prayer formed an essential part of the Celtic as of every other known Liturgy except the Clementine. Heavy penalties were specially enjoined at Iona by the abbot Cuminius in the case of any mistake in its recitation¹.

It was not introduced with the unvarying formula of the Roman Missal in its earliest as well as latest editions, 'Praeceptis salutaribus moniti, et divina institutione formati audemus dicere,' nor was it followed by the Roman embolismus, 'Libera nos, quaesumus, Domine ab omnibus malis,' &c. The varying forms substituted for these in the fragments of the Books of Deer, Dimma, and Mulling, and in the Stowe Missal², are one of the strongest proofs of an Ephesine rather than a Petrine origin of the Celtic Liturgy.

The names of local saints were sometimes introduced into the embolismus, as that of St. Patrick in the embolismus in the ancient Irish fragment at St. Gall, MS. No. 1394³, and in that of the Stowe Missal⁴.

§ 5. LECTIONS.—Lections are mentioned as forming part of the Liturgy. The following is among the directions of the abbot Cuminius: 'Sacrificium non est accipiendum de manu sacerdotis, qui orationes et lectiones secundum ritum implere non potest⁵.'

This may imply that in addition to the Epistle and Gospel there was a third lection from the Old Testament—the lectio prophetica—preceding them, as in the Mozarabic and Gallican Liturgies, of which Lesleus says in his Preface, 'In utraque Liturgia tres leguntur Scripturae lectiones una e Veteri, duae e novo Testamento⁶.'

The order of the Gallican Service is thus described by Germanus Bishop of Paris: 'Sequebatur lectio ex prophetis et ex apostolo. Nam praeter Evangelii lectionem, duas, unam ex veteri, alteram ex Novo Testamento, lectiones cantabant, quem ritum videre est apud Gregorium Turonensem (Lib. i. de Mirac. S. Martini, cap. 5) ubi haec habet; "Factum est ut illa Dominica, prophetica lectione jam lecta, ante altarium staret, qui lectionem beati Pauli proferret." In sanctorum festivitatis, sive martyrum, sive confessorum, acta eorum etiam publice legebantur, ut, auditis eorum virtutibus, populi ad similia perpetranda accenderentur. Ita Gregorius Turonensis¹ lectam fuisse S. Polycarpi passionem narrat².'

It appears, from a passage in Adamnan's Life of St. Columba, as if an additional lection from the Gospels preceded the Liturgy itself: 'Hi uno eodemque consensu elegerunt ut sanctus Columba coram ipsis in ecclesia sacra Eucharistiae consecraret mysteria. Qui eorum obsecundans jussioni, simul cum eis, die Dominica ex more, post Evangelii lectionem, ecclesiam ingreditur, ibidemque dum missarum sollemnia celebrarentur,' &c.³

§ 6. SERMON.—The sermon, when there was one, came next in order after the Gospel, as on the occasion of the Eucharist which followed the elevation of Johannes Diaconus to the rank of bishop, when St. Gall preached the consecration sermon after the Gospel had been read⁴.

§ 7. PROPER PREFACES.—The use of a Proper Preface for the Festival of St. Patrick 'sollemnitatis dormitationis ejus' is alluded to in Tirechan's Annotations, but no trace of its wording has survived⁵. In the Book of Armagh it is ordered that on that Festival 'offerterium ejus proprium immolari.' This probably means that commemoration of St. Patrick should be made in the Liturgy in a Proper Preface, for which the Gallican name was 'Immolatio Missae¹.'

A portion of the Proper Preface for the Feast of the Circumcision survives in a ninth-century MS. fragment of four pages of an ancient Irish Liturgy, No. 1394, in the library of St. Gall². Other Celtic Prefaces have been preserved in the Stowe Missal³.

§ 8. BENEDICTION.—The benediction was given with the right hand⁴ and in the Eastern manner; that is to say, the first, second, and fourth fingers were extended, while the third was closed down upon the extremity of the thumb over the palm of the hand. This may be seen in the representation of our Lord in glory in an Irish ninth-century MS. of the Four Gospels at St. Gall⁵; of St. Matthew surmounted by an angel, both of them extending the right hand in the Eastern attitude of blessing, in the Golden Gospels of Stockholm, of composite sixth-century Celtic and eighth or ninth-century Anglo-Saxon work⁶.

There are also traces of the use of the Roman mode of benediction. The thumb, fore and middle fingers are extended, and the third and fourth fingers are bent in the case of a figure sculptured in the attitude of blessing on an Iona cross⁷, and on a tenth-century cross at Oransay⁸.

With regard to the position in the Liturgy of the episcopal benediction, Dr. Döllinger⁹ concludes that it was given after the consecration and fraction, and before the immission of the consecrated particle into the chalice. This is an inference from the language in which the celebration of the Eucharist by Bishop Cronan at Iona is described by Adamnan¹.

The episcopal benediction occupied a similar position in the ancient Gallican and Mozarabic Liturgies². The same position was assigned to it in the Liturgy of the Anglo-Saxon Church³, and was perpetuated in the Sarum Use up to the first vernacular Prayer Book of 1549⁴, as it was also in France at Paris, Arles, Lyons, Rouen, Clermont, Angers, Tours, &c.⁵ Dr. Rock argues thus for the Gallican origin of this liturgical peculiarity:—

‘That such episcopal blessings formed a part of the old liturgy followed by the Gauls long before Pope St. Gregory and St. Austin’s days we learn from the fact that St. Caesarius of Arles⁶, who lived almost a whole century before those apostles of our Anglo-Saxon fathers, speaks of this rite as a thing practised everywhere about him. Knowing then as we do from the formal and public visit made to the Church in this island by SS. Germanus and Lupus how the British and Caesarii Arelat. Hom. xii. ed. Binio; Bib. Pat. viii. p. 832, edit. 1677.) ‘Unius aut duarum horarum spatium patientiam habeamus, donec in illa spiritali mensā animarum cibus apponitur, et sacramenta spiritalia consecrantur. Et quia praemissa oratione dominica vobis non ab homine sed per hominem datur, grato et pio animo, humiliato corpore et corde compuncto, rorem divinae benedictionis accipite.’ (Ejusdem Hom. viii. ed. Gallandio, Vet. Pat. Bib. xi. 12.) A few years afterwards it was enacted, A. D. 538, in the third council of Orleans: ‘De missis nullus laicorum antea discedat quam dominica dicatur oratio, et si episcopus praesens fuerit, ejus benedictio expectetur.’ (Concil. Aurelian. III, can. xxix; Mansi, Concil. tom. ix. p. 19.)

Gallic Churches were knit together, not only by the feelings of religious friendship, but by the oneness of true belief, we are warranted in thinking that a ceremonial then in common use throughout a neighbouring country with which this land kept up such an intimate connection in matters of faith, must have been common, too, here; so that our bishops among the Britons, like their brethren beyond the sea in Gaul, used to bestow their episcopal blessing at this part of the holy sacrifice¹.

§ 9. THE PAX.—The kiss of peace was given after the prayer of consecration, and immediately before the communion of the people, the priest saying these words as he gave the pax: 'Pax et caritas Domini, et eommunicatio sanctorum omnium sit semper vobiscum.' To which the people replied: 'Et cum spiritu tuo².'

The following form is found in the Antiphonarium Benchorensis: 'Ad pacem celebrandam. Injuste egimus. Redemisti nos Domine Deus veritatis in tuo sancto sanguine, nunc adjuva nos in omnibus Jesu Christe, qui regnas. Pax multa diligentibus; pax tua Domine, rex coelestis, permaneat semper in visceribus nostris ut non timeamus a timore noctis Qui regnas³.' Exclusion from communion and from the kiss of peace was the punishment for certain offences in the Welsh Church, A.D. 570⁴.

§ 10. PRAYER FOR THE DEAD.—To pray for the dead was a recognised custom in the ancient Celtic, as in every other portion of the primitive Church.

Traces of it are found in the earliest inscriptions on sepulchral or memorial stones. The following words are inscribed in Hiberno-Saxon characters on a stone cross at Gwnnws in Ancient inscriptions on gravestones at Iona in Scotland, and Lismore, &c. in Ireland, contain requests for prayers for the departed, facsimiles of which may be seen in the *Ulster Journal of Archaeology*³, Lord Dunraven's *Notes on Irish Architecture*⁴, *Æmilius Hübner's Inscriptiones Britanniae Christianae*⁵. Others in vernacular Irish, centuries vi-x, are given in Petrie's (G.) *Christian Inscriptions in the Irish Language*⁶. In one instance a bilingual inscription (Irish and Latin) has been found on a stone at Inismurray: 'Ordo Moredach hu chomochain hic dormit⁷.'

The writers of manuscripts in old days would end their volumes by requesting the prayers of their hereafter readers. On the fly-leaf of the book of Durrow, or Gospel of St. Columba, a sixth-century MS. in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, there is this entry: 'Rogo beatitudinem tuam, sancte presbyter Patrice, ut quicumque hunc libellum manu tenuerit meminerit Columbae scriptoris, qui hoc scripsi ipsemet evangelium per xii dierum spatium, gratia Domini nostri.' A little below in a contemporary hand: 'Ora pro me frater mi; Dominus tecum sit⁸.'

The colophon at the end of Adamnan's Vita S. Col. (Codex A, an early eighth-century MS.) is:—

'Quicumque hos virtutum libellos Columbae legerit pro me Dorbbeneo Dominum deprecetur, ut vitam post mortem aeternam possideam³.'

That at the end of St. John's Gospel (seventh century) in the Stowe Missal runs thus: 'Deo gratias. Amen. Finit. Amen. Rogo quicumque hunc librum legeris ut memineris mei peccatoris scriptoris. i. —————⁴ peregrinus. Amen. Sanus sit qui scripsit et cui scriptum est. Amen.'

It was part of the constant duty of the Irish Culdees in the eighth century to offer intercessions, in the shape of litanies, on behalf of the living and the dead⁵. The old Irish civil law recognised the fact that tithes, first-fruits, and alms were due from the people to the Church, the Church in return being bound to provide for the people, offering or communion, baptism, and preaching, and burial and requiem or hymn of souls⁶. The old Irish ecclesiastical law enumerated benefit to the souls of the departed among the three chief objects for which the Eucharistic offering was made⁷. In one of the canons of the Synod of St. Patrick the question is asked how the Sacrifice could be expected to benefit a person after his death, who had not received it during his lifetime¹. The monks at Iona were enjoined to display 'fervour in singing the office for the dead as if every dead person was a particular friend of theirs².' The Eucharist was celebrated on the day of the funeral, and on the third or seventh day afterwards³. When St. Gall was informed of the death of St. Columbanus he forthwith gave orders for preparations to be made to enable him to offer the sacrifice of salvation for the repose of the departed saint⁴. A like kind office was performed on behalf of St. Gall by a surviving episcopal friend⁵.

The commemoration of the departed, being one aspect and object of the Eucharist, naturally occupied a recognised position in the Liturgy.

Diptychs containing the names of the deceased were brought by the deacon to the celebrant, and their contents were announced by him during the offertory, after the first oblation of the unconsecrated elements and before the Canon. A special penance was assigned to the deacon who forgot this part of his duty⁶. This recitation of names was followed by an anthem in an authorised form of words called the 'deprecatio.' It contained an enumeration of the names of those departed saints for whose repose the prayers of the congregation were requested, and of those by whose intercessions such prayers would be assisted. We know that this collect at Iona ended with the name of St. Martin, and that on one occasion St. Columba, celebrating on the day following his reception of the news of the death of Bishop Columbanus, suddenly turned to the cantors, and bade them add that bishop's name to the deprecatio. The words of Adamnan in narrating this incident are these: 'Sed forte dum inter talia cum modulatione officia, illa consueta decanteretur deprecatio in qua sancti Martini commemoratur nomen, subito sanctus ad cantores ejusdem onomatis ad locum pervenientes, Hodie, ait, pro sancto Columbano episcopo decantare debetis. Tunc omnes qui inerant fratres intellexere quod Columbanus, episcopus Lagenensis (=Leinster), carus Columbae amicus, ad Dominum emigraverit¹.'

This passage affords a presumption in favour of the identity of the Celtic and Gallican Liturgies. In the latter Liturgy, the priest after presenting the oblations on the altar, and praying for the illapse of the Holy Ghost, recited from the diptychs the names of saints both quick and dead, in whose memory and for whom the offering was made. The liturgical formula in use for this purpose in the Church of Arles in the time of St. Aurelian (545-553) has been preserved, and in spite of its length is here subjoined in full, as being probably identical with the form of words which constituted the deprecatio in the Celtic Liturgy in use at Iona. The words suggesting such identity are printed in italics. 'Simulque precantes oramus etiam, Domine, pro animabus famulorum tuorum Patrum atque institutorum quondam nostrorum, Aureliani, Petri, Florentini, Redempti, Constantini, Himiteri, Hilarini, Januarini, Reparati, Childeberti, Ultrogothae, vel omnium fratrum nostrorum, quos de hoc loco ad te vocare dignatus es. Cunctorumque etiam hujus loci memores fidelium, pariterque parentum nostrorum atque servientium hujus loci, et pro animabus omnium fidelium famulorum tuorum, vel famularum, ac peregrinorum in pace ecclesiae defunctorum, ut eis tu, Domine Deus noster, peccatorum tribuas veniam et requiem largiaris aeternam; meritis et intercessionibus sanctorum tuorum, Mariae genitricis Domini nostri Jesu Christi, Joannis Baptistae et praecursoris Domini nostri Jesu Christi, Stephani, Petri, Pauli, Joannis, Jacobi, Andreae, Philippi, Thomae, Bartholomaei, Matthaei, Jacobi, Simonis, Judae, Matthiae, Genesii, Symphoriani, Baudilii, Victoris, Hilarii, episcopi et confessoris, Martini episcopi et confessoris, Caesarii episcopi, haec propitius praestare et exaudire digneris, qui vivis et regnas in unitate Spiritus sancti Deus in saecula saeculorum. Amen¹.

The first group of names in this 'deprecatio'² (this title being suggested by the word 'precantes') consists of fathers and founders of the Church of Arles; the second group consists of fifteen saints of Holy Scripture, followed by certain leading Gallican saints, the last of whom is Caesarius Bishop of Arles, died A.D. 542. His name, which appears here on account of a local relation, would probably have been omitted at Iona, and so the name of St. Martin, who was held in special veneration in these islands, would be the last on the list, until on the occasion referred to by Adamnan St. Columba ordered the name of Columbanus to be added to it³. Two specimens of the 'deprecatio' or 'Collectio post nomina' of the ancient Irish Liturgy have survived in the Stowe Missal⁴.

This position of the commemoration of the living and the dead survives in the Anglican Liturgy, while in the Roman it occupies a different place, being within and a portion of the Canon itself.

There are no instances recorded of the modern practice of praying to departed saints, although there was a strong and devout belief in the efficacy of their prayers for those left on earth. St. Columba's power of prevailing with God by intercession was recognised as continuing to be exercised after his death¹. Several instances of it are recorded by Adamnan², among them the exemption of the Picts and Scots from a pestilence which devastated the rest of Great Britain and Ireland. Adamnan's belief is expressed in these words: 'Now to what other person can this favour granted them by God be attributed unless to St. Columba, whose monasteries lie within the territories of both these people, and have been regarded by both with the greatest respect up to the present time? But what I am now to say cannot I think be heard without a sigh, that there are very many stupid people in both countries, who in their ignorance that they owe their exemption from the plague to the prayers of the saint, ungratefully and wickedly abuse the patience and the goodness of God³.' In a very early collect for St. Patrick's Day preserved in the Corpus Missal⁴ God is directly besought to receive St Patrick's intercessions on behalf of His people.

§ 11. PRAYER OF CONSECRATION.—The original Celtic formula of consecration does not survive, but there are allusions to it which imply that, like the rest of the service, it was pronounced

Ib. ii. 46. It is easy to understand how this belief produced in the course of time the habit of invocation of saints, as found in the later Litanies in the Stowe Missal (ch. iii. § 14), St. Gall MS. 1395 (ib. § 10), and in the later lives of the saints passim.

in an audible voice¹. The breaking of the bread formed so integral a portion of its ritual that 'frangere panem' is used as an equivalent term for 'missarum sollempnia celebrare'². The use of the words of institution and consecration is sometimes indicated in Celtic MSS., as in surviving Gallican fragments, by the opening words, 'Qui pridie'³. In both cases the Prayer of Consecration seems to have been brief, the introductory clauses up to this point varying with each festival.

If this inference is admitted, we are able to reconstruct the Canon of the Celtic Church, as used on saints' days, in the following form:—

'Vere sanctus, vere benedictus, vere mirabilis in sanctis suis, Deus noster Jesus Christus ipse dabit virtutem, et fortitudinem plebi suae; benedictus Deus, quem benedicimus in Apostolis, et in omnibus sanctis suis, qui placuerunt ei ab initio saeculi, per eundem Dominum nostrum Jesum Christum,

Qui pridie quam pateretur, in sanctis manibus suis accepit panem, respexit in coelum ad te, sancte Pater, omnipotens aeternae Deus, gratias agens, benedixit, fregit, fractumque apostolis suis et discipulis suis tradidit dicens;

Accipite et edite ex hoc omnes; hoc est enim corpus meum, quod pro multis confringetur.

Similiter etiam calicem postquam coenatum est, pridie quam pateretur, accepit, respexit in caelum ad te, sancte Pater, omnipotens aeternae Deus, gratias agens, benedixit, apostolis suis et discipulis suis tradidit dicens;

³ Stowe Missal, ch. iii. § 14.

⁴ The first part of this Prayer of Consecration is taken from the Stowe

The absence of the full text of the Consecration Prayer as used in the earliest Liturgies of the Churches of Britain and Gaul has been sometimes accounted for by a theory, supported rather by conjecture than by evidence, that it was supplanted by the Roman Canon before the 'disciplina arcani' had been altogether abandoned, so that though the rest of the service was written, the Canon was recited by the priest from memory, only its opening words 'Qui pridie' being sometimes indicated in writing.

The presence of the Roman Canon in the Stowe Missal¹ proves that it was introduced into at least partial use in Ireland late in the eighth century, the numerous passages interpolated into it being probably survivals of the earlier and now lost Celtic rite.

§ 12. COMMUNION ANTHEMS.—In the ancient Irish Church a hymn was sung after the prayer of consecration, during the communion of the clergy and before that of the people. In the Preface to the Leabhar Breac, a composition assigned to the seventh or eighth century, there is a legend which speaks of a choir of angels being heard in the church of St. Sechnall, chanting the hymn 'Sancti Venite,' &c., which hymn, the writer adds, has been sung in the Irish Church while the people were communicating². No trace of such a hymn has been hitherto found in any mediaeval Breviaries or Antiphonaries, but it is preserved in the Antiphonarium Benchorensis, where it is entitled *Hymnum quando communicarent sacerdotes*³.

During the communion of the people anthems were sung, slightly varying forms of which have been preserved in the St. Gall MS. No. 1394⁴, the Antiphonary of Bangor⁵, and the Stowe Missal⁶.

They occupied a position corresponding to that of the Missal, ch. iii. § 14. Compare the Collectio post Sanctus for Christmas Eve in the Missale Gothicum, p. 33. The second part is taken from the Gallican work known under the title of Ambros. de Sacramentis, lib. iv. cap. v.

anthem called 'Transitorium' in the Ambrosian, the 'Trecanum' in the Gallican, the anthem 'Gustate et videte' &c. in the Mozarabic, and the 'Communio' in the Roman rite.

§ 13. THE BENEDICTITE.—The 'Song of the Three Children' appears in various forms and occupies a prominent position in the Antiphonary of Bangor¹, from which fact we infer that this canticle with its antiphons formed a constituent part of the Celtic, as it did of the Gallican² and Mozarabic Liturgies³, where it was sung before the Gospel (Gall.), or before the Epistle (Moz.), on all Sundays and saints' days.

We pass on from the service itself to some account of its ritual accessories.

§ 14. POSITION OF THE PRIEST.—The position of the celebrant was before the altar ('ante altare'), that is to say, facing the altar and with his back to the congregation. This we infer from the expression 'de vertice' in Cuminus' description of the four brothers watching St. Columba celebrate at Iona, and seeing a strange light streaming down upon his head⁴. Gildas speaking of the degenerate character of the British

The fourteenth canon of the Fourth Council of Toledo, A.D. 633, was in these words:—'Diebus Dominicis atque in martyrum sollemnitatibus ante epistolam cantatur canticum trium puerorum.'

priesthood describes them as 'seldom sacrificing and never with clean hearts standing at the altar¹.'

Extended hands.—Gildas also makes mention of extended hands as part of the ritual of the Mass, speaking of British priests as 'extending their hands over the holy sacrifice²,' an expression which may find a counterpart in the rubric which in the Sarum Missal immediately follows the consecration of the chalice, 'Deinde sacerdos elevet brachia sua in modum crucis,' in the 'extensis manibus' of the Roman rite; and in various rubrical directions in the Anglican and Eastern Liturgies³. It is also the ordinary attitude of prayer in early Italian art⁴.

§ 15. VESTMENTS.—Special vestments were in use at the altar. It is recorded among the instances of the generosity of St. Bridget that 'she gave away to the poor the transmarine and foreign vestments of Bishop Condladh, of glorious light, which he was accustomed to use when offering the holy mysteries at the altars, on the festivals of our Lord and the vigils of the Apostles⁵.' Adamnan relates how on one occasion the vestments and books of St. Columba were placed on the altar⁶.

Among the episcopal or sacerdotal vestments and ornaments alluded to in these passages as being in use in these early times we have proof of the existence of the following:—

The Chasuble.—This vestment in its primitive full circular shape⁷, with embroidered orphreys, is represented on figures in the reliquary of St. Maedoc¹ (eighth-century, Irish), on Evangelists depicted in the Book of Deer² (ninth-century, Scottish), and on figures of priests sculptured on the very ancient Kirriermuir stones in Scotland. Two of these priests hold books, the third has no book, but a Δ-shaped ornament on the lower front part of his dress just above the feet³. Several of these figures will be seen to have in front of them a rectangular ornament which may be taken for a book borne in the hand, but which is possibly the rationale.

Rationale.—The rationale is an ancient but little known ornament of the Celtic bishops, which according to Dr. Rock is never found in Anglo-Saxon times, but which re-appeared among the episcopal ornaments in Anglo-Norman days, and dropped entirely out of use in the fourteenth century. It was fashioned in all shapes, at one time round, at another a trefoil or a quatrefoil, but more generally an oblong square. It was made of gold or silver, studded with precious stones, and it was worn in imitation of the rational of the Aaronic priesthood, from which it took its name⁴. Another example of it

Alb.—The figures above referred to on the shrine of St. Maedoc are vested in albs with embroidered borders (apparels) under their chasubles². So also are those on the Soiscel Molaise³.

Maniple.—The maniple appears to have been worn not on the wrist, but over, and depending from the forefinger of the left hand, as on the figure of St. Jerome in the Golden Psalter at St. Gall⁴. The same mode of wearing it prevailed in the Anglo-Saxon Church, as may be seen by the vested figure worked on St. Cuthbert's stole at Durham, and proved by the inscription on it to have been embroidered by Queen Elfleda, wife of King Edward the Elder, 905–906; and at Rome up to the eleventh century, as in the fresco of St. Clement⁵.

Ring.—There was a ring in the tomb of Ebregeisilus Bishop of Meaux, a monk of the Columban school, when it was opened in the seventh century⁶. There is still earlier evidence of the use of the episcopal ring in Gaul, which is a presumption in favour of its use among contemporaneous British bishops. Clovis I, writing to the Gallican bishops A.D. 510, promised to pay every attention to their letters provided that they sealed them with the seals of their pastoral rings⁷. Bishop of Valence, requested that his monogram might be engraved on his ring¹.

Pectoral Cross.—The pectoral cross of St. Aidan, a monk of Iona and first Bishop of Lindisfarne (635–652), was preserved among the relics at Durham in the fourteenth century². There is evidence in the writings of St. Gregory of Tours that pectoral crosses were worn by Gallican bishops in the sixth century³.

Pastoral Staff.—There is varied evidence for the early use of the pastoral staff as an ornament and emblem of authority borne by bishops. Its Celtic name was cambutta, cambota, or more rarely cambo⁴. St. Patrick's staff is alluded to in a seventh-century Irish prophecy, preserved by the Scholiast on Fiacc's Hymn⁵, and later authority asserts that it was made of gold, and adorned with precious stones⁶. His disciples St. Dagaeus and St. Asic were traditionally famous for their skill in gilding and bejewelling pastoral staffs and other ecclesiastical ornaments⁷. St. Columba is said to have made many crosses, book-satchels (polaires), and pastoral staffs⁸. When he and St. Kentigern met they exchanged staffs, and St. Kentigern's staff, as given to him by St. Columba, covered with gold and jewels, was still preserved at Ripon in the beginning of the fifteenth century¹. In the tenth century it was held in great veneration, and was carried as a standard in going to battle under the name of 'Cathbhuaidh'² (= Battle Victory).

In its original shape the episcopal staff was short, rounded at the top, truncated at the bottom, and made of wood. A specimen may be seen in the hands of one of the figures engraved on the ancient Irish shrine of St. Maedoc of Ferns³; and in the hand of an ecclesiastic, vested in an embroidered chasuble, engraved on the Soiscel Molaise, a small box of tenth-century work at the latest, which once contained a now lost copy of the Gospels written in the sixth century by St. Molaise of Devenish. It is fair to add that it rather resembles an aspersory than a pastoral staff⁴, in which case it might be appealed to as evidence for the early use of holy water, and the small circular vessel, like a pome, held by another figure, might be a holy-water stoup⁵, but the smallness of the vessel and the largeness of the staff seem fatal to this explanation. It is not unlike the baton of a ruler of a choir. St. Padarn, who arrived in Wales from Armerica A.D. 576 and became first bishop of Llandabarn, had a choral cap and staff presented to him by the people in recognition of his musical talent⁶. But on the whole it may be with most probability inferred that it is an early form of a Celtic bishop's pastoral staff, which in the ninth or tenth century began to assume its more modern and now usual form. specimens of the primitive cambutta, in its transition size and shape, may be seen in the hands of St. Matthew and St. Luke, as depicted in the MS. Gospels of Meiel Brith Mac Durnan, c. A.D. 850¹, and in the case of a figure carved on the cumhdach, or metal-work cover, of the Stowe Missal². The Bachal-more of St. Moloech, in the possession of the Duke of Argyll, and figured in the Origines Parochiales (ii. 163), is a black-thorn bludgeon, with traces of a metal covering, measuring only 2 feet 10 inches in length. Several of the bronze cambuttas preserved in the museum of the Irish Academy are little longer.

Bracelets.—It has been suggested that bracelets or cuffs formed part of the sacerdotal costume of a British priest. In the absence of documentary or other reliable evidence this is merely an inference from the custom of the early Gallican priesthood to wear metal bracelets or cuffs of silk or other handsome texture³.

‘If,’ says Dr. Rock, ‘the ritual observances of our Britons were like those of their nearest neighbour, Gaul,—and there is every reason for thinking so,—then do we, far off as we are from their times, catch a glimpse of another among the sacred appurtenances of a priest in the British era of our Church history; and beholding him vested for the holy sacrifice of

Bracelets have frequently been found in ancient tumuli, and in other places and positions. A gold bracelet found in a loch in Galloway, and consisting of two very artificially intertwining circles, has been assigned to a late Celtic period². Celtic circular ornaments of gold have been found in Peebles-shire³; bracelets, armlets, earrings, bead and jet ornaments have been discovered in British burial-places⁴, and in Ireland⁵. But there is nothing in the shape of proof, it is mere conjecture to assign to these bracelets, as has been sometimes done, any ecclesiastical connection. Such a connection, in any case, would more probably be with Druidism than with Christianity. The Druid priests of Great Britain may have resembled those of Gaul, who, Strabo informs us, wore golden bracelets, and coloured vesture variegated with gold⁶. But the tendency of recent investigation has been to assign to all such relics a distant prehistoric date, perhaps as far back as the neolithic period of mankind⁷.

Comb.—The ritual use of the comb, now long since obsolete, but as it was employed in Anglo-Saxon times before High Mass⁸, was probably derived from the Celtic Church. The comb of St. Kentigern was one of the relics kept in Glasgow Cathedral¹. That of St. Cuthbert was buried with him². Representations of a comb, sometimes accompanied with scissors, are frequently found in the early sculptured stones of Scotland, where its appearance has been variously interpreted as a trace of the Eastern custom of designating the sex of a person by a single-toothed or double-toothed comb or as a sign of his trade, or dignity, or as having some ecclesiastical significance. These and other theories are discussed at length and with much ingenuity by Mr. Stuart³. The Christian character of the device is just possible, but is incapable of proof, and is more nearly disproved by the probable date of the stones themselves. The profession of a Christian priest is usually indicated by other symbols, such as a book in the hand, a chalice and paten, or a consecrated host as in the Nigg stone⁴.

⁷ Greenwell and Rolleston, British Barrows. In an article in the Edinburgh Review for April, 1878, it is concluded that most of these ornaments belong either to the iron age, or to the third and last, the Maeringian, period of the bronze age.

⁸ The Anglo-Saxon ritual was as follows:—If a bishop pontificated, the deacon and sub-deacon combed his hair as soon as his sandals had been put on his feet, while seated on his episcopal chair within the chancel; if a priest

Crowns.—The Celtic bishops wore crowns instead of mitres. St. Sampson, a Welshman, generally but incorrectly described as Archbishop of York, and subsequently of Dol in Brittany⁵, c. A.D. 557, is said to have dreamed that he saw 'three eminent bishops adorned with golden crowns standing before him⁶.'

celebrated, the same office of the comb was performed for him seated in the sedilia. More curious was the ritual at Viviers in France, A.D. 1360, where the ceremony of combing was performed several times during Mass: 'Sacra celebraturus sedet dum in choro Kyrie, Gloria, et Credo decantantur; unde quoties assurgebat, ipsi capillos pectebat diaconus, amoto ejus capello seu almucio, licet id officii jam in secretario antequam ad altare procederet, sollicito ei praestitisset.' There is a representation of an Irish bishop thus crowned on a sculptured bas-relief of great antiquity, part of a ruined chapel in the valley of Glendalough¹. The use of this crown in a modified form² continued in Anglo-Saxon times until the tenth century, when representations of the mitre, properly so called, begin to be found; which originally resembled a flat cap, and did not assume its present cloven and horned shape till after the Conquest³.

Sometimes crowns were suspended over shrines, as in the case of the early Irish church of St. Bridget described by Cogitosus⁴, where there was a richly decorated altar with gold and silver crowns hanging over it. This was an Eastern custom. According to Du Cange, the custom of hanging crowns over the altar in the church of St. Sophia dated from the time of Constantine the Great⁵. It was also a Gallican custom. Crowns were suspended over the tomb of St. Martin at Tours⁶, a tomb to which the early Irish made frequent pilgrimages⁷.

look like discs of metal, fastened to the dress by laces passed through small holes perforated in the discs. They are possibly insignia of either lay rank or sacred dignity, or else large brooches which are often represented as fastening up the dress at the shoulder in the case of ecclesiastics on the early Irish crosses¹. The Brehon laws assign the brooch as one of the distinctive emblems of royalty; 'brooches of gold having crystal inserted in them with the sons of the King of Erin, and of the king of a province, and brooches of silver with the sons of a king of a territory,' &c.² The following account gives a quasi-supernatural sanction for the brooch becoming part of a saint's dress: 'Then Diarmoyt, the son of Cearbuyll King of Ireland, who ruled in the city of Themoria in the country of Midhi, saw in a dream two angels take the royal necklace from off his neck and give it to a man unknown to himself. On the next day St. Brendan came to that king. And when he beheld him, he said to his friends, "This is the man to whom I saw my necklace given." Then the wise men said to the king, "Hitherto the rule of Ireland has been in the hands of kings; hereafter thy kingdom will be divided among Ireland's saints³."'

We may take the fact that the brooch, which was originally part of the regal insignia, became a part also of ecclesiastical dress, as a sign of the great honour which was paid in early times to the saints in Ireland⁴.

Sandals.—Sandals are represented on the feet of St. Matthew and St. John in the Book of Kells, and in the case of many other figures in early Celtic MSS. They were worn at Iona, and were called ‘calceus,’ or ‘calceamentum,’ or ‘fico,’ all words frequently employed in the Lives of Celtic saints¹. Curiously-shaped slippers are to be seen on the feet of four ecclesiastics on a sculptured stone at St. Vigean’s, to whom the Roman tonsure on their heads compels the assignation of a date subsequent to A.D. 710².

Caracalla.—The ordinary outer dress of a British priest was a long hair cassock called a ‘caracalla.’ This was worn by the priest Amphibalus³, and assumed by St. Alban in exchange for his own clothes in order to facilitate the escape of the former⁴. The ordinary outer cloak of a monk at Iona was called ‘amphibalus’⁵ or ‘cuculla’⁶, worn over a white under-dress, ‘tunica candida’ or ‘pallium’⁷.

§ 16. USE OF COLOURS.—It has been asserted that the assigning of special colours to certain seasons for sacerdotal vestments or altar coverings does not belong to the first eight centuries of Christianity⁸. This is true as far as any elaborate cycle of colours is concerned, such as is prescribed in mediaeval Missals and Rituals, but allusion to the ecclesiastical use in the Celtic Church of at least two colours has been preserved to us.

Purple.—Gildas refers to the custom of covering the altars in British churches with purple palls¹. The three choirs of saints which appeared to St. Brendan were clad 'in vestibus candidissimis jacinthinis purpureis' (Navigatio S. Brendani, eleventh century MS. Nat. Lib. Paris, No. 3784). St. Cuthbert was buried in a purple dalmatic A.D. 687, but this fact illustrates early Anglo-Saxon rather than Celtic usage². In the legend of St. Mulling, as preserved in the Book of Leinster, an Irish MS. of the earlier half of the twelfth century, Christ is represented as appearing to that saint, in a vision vouchsafed to him in church, in a purple garment³. Purple is very largely introduced into the earliest extant specimens of Celtic illumination, as in the Book of Kells, and into the later Irish MSS. at St. Gall⁴. A passage in Bede's works alluding to the ease with which a red or purple dye could be obtained from shells on the Irish coasts, at once explains and renders probable the preponderating ecclesiastical use of this colour⁵. We have evidence of the use of purple altar-cloths—pallae—in the early Gallican Church. St. Germanus of Paris, c. A.D. 550, explains the use of this colour by referring to the mention of purple in the Levitical account of the tabernacle¹. St. Gregory of Tours, in the same century, mentions the defence of the Abbess of St. Radegund against the charge of cutting up one of these purple altar-coverings for a dress for her niece². And the use of these purple altar-palls was perpetuated, like other British and Gallican customs, in the Anglo-Saxon Church³.

White.—The second colour, of the ecclesiastical use of which there is distinct mention, is white. It was the festal colour at Iona. Adamnan describes how white vestments were worn by St. Columba and his attendants on the occasion of the celebration in memory of Columbanus, as if it was a holy day⁴.

The same saint when dying before the altar at Iona was clothed in a white dress⁵. White is the only colour referred to in the early Irish Canons, which order that the deacon at the time of oblation should be clad in a white vestment⁶; whereas in a mediaeval Irish tract on the origin and meaning of colours in the mass-vestments, as many as seven colours are named, yellow, blue, white, green, red, black, purple⁷. In this employment of white the custom of the Celtic agreed with that of the early Gallican Church. In the fifth and sixth centuries white was recognised there as the festal, and especially as the Paschal colour. St. Remigius Bishop of Rheims, in his will A.D. 499, bequeathed to his successor his white Easter vestment¹. Similar allusions are found in the case of St. Caesarius of Arles², and of St. Gregory of Tours³. St. Germanus of Paris c. 550 mentions the appearance of angels clad in white at the sepulchre as the symbolical reason for the selection of white as the liturgical colour at Eastertide⁴.

The predominant employment of white and red in the Sarum Use may be a survival of the early British preference for those colours.

Is it only a coincidence that the Rule of St. Columba recognised but two classes of martyrdom, 'red martyrdom' (= death), 'white martyrdom'⁵ (= self-mortification)?

§ 17. CHORAL SERVICE.—The services of the Celtic Church, both at the altar and in the choir, were choral. Gildas, referring to Britain, speaks of 'ecclesiastical melodies,' and the musical voices of the young sweetly singing the praises of God⁶. The word 'decantare' is used of the introduction of the Liturgy into Ireland in the fifth century⁷, and of its performance at Iona in the sixth century⁸. Adamnan states that the voice of St. Columba was so powerful that when he was chaunting he could be heard sometimes half a mile, sometimes even a mile off,—a statement not necessarily involving either miracle or exaggeration,—in the still air of an autumn day on one of the western islands of Scotland¹. In Ireland music was an art early cultivated, and intimately connected with divine worship. Harpers are represented on the most ancient sculptured stones of Ireland, and pipers are introduced as decorations of initial letters in sacred manuscripts of the eighth and ninth centuries². In the Félire of Oengus a good man is compared to ‘an altar whereon wine is shed, round which is sung a multitude of melodies³.’ Irish Annals speak of the destruction of church organs A.D. 814⁴. There is nothing improbable in such an entry, as organs are known to have been in general use in Western Europe before that date⁵. The more interesting question is, What was the style and character of the music in the Celtic Church? To this enquiry, unfortunately, no answer can be given beyond the negative one, that it was not the Roman chaunt in its

There is a still earlier representation of an organ on one of the catacomb stones in the monastery of San Paolo fuori le Mura at Rome. St. Augustine says that organs with bellows were used in his day; Comment in Ps. lxi. These organs must have been curious and cumbrous structures if they resembled that which Ælfeah Bishop of Winchester (934–51) caused to be constructed in his monastery, which required seventy men to blow it.

Gregorian, nor probably in any other form. Bede asserts that the Roman style of singing was first introduced into England generally by Benedict Biscop, Abbot of Wearmouth, A.D. 678, and into the monasteries founded by Scottish missionaries in the North of England by St. Wilfrid, who died c. A.D. 709¹.

Dr. O'Connor discusses the question with much ingenuity and research in his '*Rerum Hibernicarum Scriptores*².' He endorses to a certain extent the conclusion of Mabillon, that the choral service of the British Church which was not 'juxta morem Romanum' was therefore 'juxta morem Orientalem.' The Eastern course having been introduced into the monasteries of Lerins and Marseilles (as described by Cassian³), and having been learned there or elsewhere in Gaul by Germanus and Lupus (and Patrick), was by them introduced into Great Britain and Ireland in the fifth century, and was transferred thence to Scotland by Irish missionaries in the sixth century⁴. The subject is hardly sufficiently relevant to the Liturgy to be discussed here at further length.

§ 18. INCENSE.—We have been unable to discover any passage referring to the use of incense in the Celtic Church⁵. Thuribles or incense-cups have often been found in British burial-places, as at Lancaster Moor⁶, at Brixworth⁷, &c. The perforation of these cups near the upper rim implies that they were to be swung, and the occurrence of ornamentation on the under surface, which is not found in cinerary and other urns, proves that they were intended to be suspended above the level of the eye. The symbol of the cross has been found on some of these cups, as on those discovered at Bryn Seiont, Carnarvonshire, and at other places¹. The date of such relics is undetermined. The mark of the cross used generally to be referred to as an evidence of their connection with Christianity, and was often relied upon by antiquarians as a proof of a post-Christian date, as in the case of bronze spoons found at Llanfair in Wales, and of inscribed stones, &c. elsewhere². But it has been found as an emblem on vases, ornaments and relics, both in the British islands and in continental pile-wrought villages, and lacustrine dwellings and cemeteries, many centuries anterior to the Christian era³; and the most recent and experienced archaeologists are decided in their view that these incense urns have no connection with Christianity⁴. The psalm 'Dirigatur,' &c. which accompanies the act of censuring in the modern Roman Missal is indicated for use in the Stowe Missal, but there are no rubrical directions there for the use of incense⁵. It may be added that no trace exists of the use of incense in the early Gallican Church. It is not mentioned in any rubric of the surviving Missals, nor is there any allusion to it in the somewhat full 'Expositio Missae' of Germanus Parisiensis (sixth century.)

§ 19. JOINT CONSECRATION.—A very singular custom existed at Iona of two or more priests being ordinarily united in the Eucharistic prayer and act of consecration; to consecrate singly being the prerogative of bishops, or of individual priests specially selected and empowered to consecrate on account of their sanctity or eminence.

Adamnan records how 'on one occasion a stranger from the province of Munster, who concealed through humility the fact that he was a bishop, was invited, on the next Sunday, by Columba to join with him in consecrating the body of Christ, that as two priests they might break the bread of the Lord together. Columba, on going to the altar, discovered his rank, and addressed him thus: "Christ bless thee, brother; consecrate alone as a bishop; now we know that thou art of episcopal rank. Why hast thou endeavoured to disguise thyself so long, and to prevent our giving thee the honour due to thee¹?"

On another occasion four illustrious visitors from Ireland paid a special mark of respect to St. Columba by requesting him to offer the Eucharist in their presence².

This custom of joint celebrants in the case of priests, and of a single celebrant in the case of a bishop, is peculiar to the Celtic rite, no similar practice existing in any other country or at any other time. There was something exactly opposed to it in the once general but now nearly obsolete rule of the Western Church, that when a bishop celebrated the priests present should unite with him in the words and acts of consecration³. This direction still survives in the Roman service for the 'Ordering of Presbyters,' when the newly-ordained priests join with the bishop in repeating the words of the Canon⁴. The same custom § 20. OBLATIONS AND OFFERTORY.—The oblations of bread and wine for the Eucharistic service, and offerings of money, ornaments or other precious gifts, were made, in accordance with the general custom of the Gallican and Mozarabic Liturgies, just before the recitation from the diptychs of the names of departed saints². St. Augustine seems to have found this custom in existence in England, for one of his first questions to St. Gregory was as to the proportion in which such alms and offerings were to be distributed³.

Early Irish canons, attributed to St. Patrick, lay down that the offerings of the wicked and the excommunicate are not to be accepted⁴. St. Patrick mentions in his Confession how the devoted and warm-hearted Irish women among his disciples made offerings at his altar of ornaments and personal presents, and how he offended them by always returning them afterwards, lest the unbelieving should have appearance of ground for scandal against him⁵. When St. Columba was making 'the offering of Christ's Body and Blood' in the presence of Comgall and Cainnech, at their special request, 'then it was

⁶ The passage is corrupt, but the meaning is obvious. 'Nam etsi imperitus sum in omnibus, tamen conatus sum quispiam servare me etiam et fratribus Christianis, et virginibus Christi, et mulieribus religiosis, quae mihi ultronea munuscula donabant, et super altare reddebant, ex ornamentis suis, et iterum reddebam illis,' &c. that Cainnech beheld a pillar of fire over Colombcille's head while at the offertory¹.

In the Mozarabic and Gallican Liturgies an anthem or hymn was sung during the offertory called 'Sacrificium' or 'Sonum².' Such may be this short anthem in the Antiphony of Bangor, which resembles an offertory sentence of the Anglican Liturgy rather than the offertorium of the Roman Missal.

'Pro eleemosynariis.—Dispersit, dedit pauperibus, iustitia ejus manet in saeculum saeculi, cornu ejus exaltabitur in gloriâ.

Eleemosynas facientibus in hoc mundo retribue, Domine, in regno tuo sancto.'

An account is preserved in the Leabhar Breac of the ritual accompanying the oblation of the elements which is probably a genuine survival of the ancient Celtic Liturgy. First three drops of water were placed in the chalice, the priest saying, 'Peto [or Quaeso] te, pater, deprecor te, filii, obsecro te, spiritus sancte;' then three drops of wine, with the accompanying formula, 'Mittet pater, indulgeat filius, misseretur spiritus sanctus³;' or, 'Remittet pater, indulget filius, misseretur spiritus sanctus⁴.'

§ 21. UNLEAVENED BREAD.—Dr. Döllinger enumerates the use of unleavened bread in the Eucharist among the peculiarities of the British Church, and as one of the points on which it differed from the rest of Western Christendom: 'Dass der Gebrauch der Azyma eine Eigenthumlichkeit der Briten gewesen sey, schliesse ich aus einer Stelle der capitula selecta canonum Hibern bei D'Achery, Spicileg. i. 505: Gildas ait: Britones toto mundo contrarii, moribus Romanis inimici non solum in missa, sed etiam in tonsura cum Judæis umbrae futurorum servientes. Latinos, Bibl. PP. Max. xviii. 405. aus; Qui azymorum adhuc participant, sub umbra legis sunt, et Hebraeorum mensam comedunt¹.

This ingenious inference is supported, as far as the later continental Celtic Church is concerned, by a statement of Walafrid Strabo that it was the custom of St. Gall to use unleavened bread². The design at the foot of the monogram of the Book of Kells may be taken to prove that circular wafer bread, stamped with a \times , was in use in Ireland in the sixth century. The consecrated wafer bread is there drawn between animals which seem to hesitate to destroy or devour it³. The host in a circular form, with a chalice or portable altar underneath it, is represented between two kneeling figures on the Nigg stone in Ross-shire⁴. In mediaeval Celtic literature there are plentiful allusions to wafer bread.

‘I asked the secular priests,

To their bishops and their judges,

The Paternoster, and consecrated wafers, and a holy Creed⁵.

Dr. Döllinger is not quite right in inferring that in their use of unleavened bread the British Church differed from the rest of Western Christendom,—‘während man sich damals in der Römischen Kirche und im übrigen Occident noch des gesäuerten Brodes bediente,’—and Bingham is quite wrong in asserting that it is ‘a matter beyond all dispute that the Church for a thousand years used no other but common or leavened bread in the Eucharist¹. Unleavened bread was not only used in the early Celtic Church, but also in the African Church in St. Cyprian's time², in the Spanish Church in the ninth century³, in the Anglo-Saxon Church under Archbishop Theodore⁴, and in Alcuin's time⁵.

§ 22. MIXED CHALICE.—The universal custom of the primitive Church to mix water with the wine for consecration in the Eucharistic cup⁶ obtained in the Celtic Church also. This may be inferred from Adamnan's account of St. Columba in his youth, in Ireland (Scotia), acting on one occasion as deacon and fetching water for the celebration of the Eucharist⁷.

On one occasion, when St. Finden of Movilla was celebrating, water only, and not wine, had been provided. St. Columba, who was present, removed the difficulty by turning the water into wine⁸.

The cross engraved on bronze spoons found at Llanfair in Wales has been held to be a proof of their connection with Christian usage⁹; and it has been suggested that they were Eucharistic spoons used for the administration of the consecrated wine. This is merely conjecture, faintly supported by the fact that a bronze chalice was used by St. Columbanus in the sixth century, and that another bronze chalice of eighth-century Irish workmanship is still preserved in the convent of Kremsmünster on the ~~Rhine~~^{Rhine}. But if these bronze spoons had any liturgical use at all, they were more probably employed for conveying a little water into the chalice of wine before consecration, in accordance with a custom which prevailed almost universally in the early Church¹. Such might have been the use of the small bronze spoon found under St. Martin's Cross at Iona, and now in the possession of the Duke of Argyll², and of a diminutive gold spoon found in the river Bann, and figured in the *Ulster Journal of Archaeology*³. An account of ancient bronze spoons found at Weston is given in the *Proceedings of the Society of Antiquaries for Scotland*⁴. Notwithstanding the sacred character which has been conjecturally assigned to their ornamentation, it is probable that all these spoons were put to ordinary culinary, rather than to any ecclesiastical use.

§ 23. COMMUNION IN BOTH KINDS.—We might infer the fact of communion in both kinds from such words as these of Columbanus: 'If thou art thirsty, drink the Fount of life; if thou art hungry, eat the Bread of life. Blessed are they who hunger for this Bread, and thirst for this Fount, for ever eating and drinking, they still desire to eat and drink⁵.' They form a metaphor the full force of which would have been lost in a Church where communion in one kind only was the rule. But more direct proof is obtainable. In the Rule of Columbanus a special penalty is assigned to any who injure the chalice with their teeth⁶. In St. Sechnall's Hymn in praise of St. Patrick that saint is described as one 'who draws heavenly wine in heavenly cups, and gives drink to the people of God from a spiritual chalice⁷.' The Communion Hymn of the early Irish Church¹ is full of allusions to the reception of the chalice. So are the formulæ of Administration and of the Communio preserved at the close of the Antiphonary of Bangor².

In the later lives of the saints such expressions as these abound: 'After the girl had received the Body of Christ and His blood she died without anxiety;' and 'The old man pointed out to them the land of which they were in search, i.e. the Land of Promise, and having received the Body of Christ and His blood he went to heaven³.' Reference has been already made to the possible connection of certain ancient spoons with the administration of the Eucharist⁴. In the church at Kildare there was 'a special door through which St. Bridget and her virgins passed, that they might enjoy the banquet of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ⁵.' The act of communion was called 'going to the chalice' in the Rule of the Irish Culdees⁶. St. Cuthbert, who cannot be supposed in his later days to have deserted on such a point as this the Celtic traditions of his youth⁷, was entreated by an officer of the court of Egfrid King of Northumberland to send a priest to visit his wife before her death, and to administer to her 'the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ⁸;'

³ Irish Life of St. Brendan, quoted in Todd's Life of St. Patrick, p. 460, n. Although the separate mention of the Body and Blood of Christ indicates the double administration, the absence of such two-fold mention does not necessarily disprove it. In Jonas' Life of St. Columbanus, that saint is described as giving the viaticum to another person named Columbanus in these words, 'Corpus Christi abeunti de hoc vita viaticum praebeet.' and himself, immediately before his own death, received the Blessed Sacrament in both kinds from the hands of Herefrid Abbot of Lindisfarne¹.

The cup was administered by the deacon. There are extant certain canonical regulations of the Welsh Church c. A.D. 589, where among the penances attached to greater crimes are a refusal of permission to a priest to celebrate or to a deacon to hold the chalice². The chalice from which St. Bridget was communicated was administered by 'unus de pueris Episcopi³.'

§ 24. COMMUNION OF INFANTS.—There are traces of the once universal custom of administering the Eucharist to children after baptism in the Stowe Missal, where a formula of communion and several collects of thanksgiving after eucharistic reception are placed at the close of a Baptismal Office, the language of which implies that it was intended to be used in the case of infants as well as of adults⁴. In a later Irish Ordo Baptismi (twelfth century) it is directed that the newly-baptized infant shall be confirmed if a bishop be present⁵. There may also be some significance in the appointment of St. Matt. xix. 14 (Sinite parvulos, &c.) as an Antiphon ad Communionem in the Stowe Missal⁶ and in the St. Gall MS. 1394⁷.

§ 25. WOMEN TO BE VEILED AT THE RECEPTION OF THE SACRAMENT, AND NOT TO APPROACH THE ALTAR.—Among the regulations laid down in the Penitential of Cuminius is one that 'women shall receive the Holy Communion under a dark veil;' and St. Basil is referred to as an authority for this undoubtedly Eastern custom¹. There was a similar order for women to approach the altar with their heads veiled in the Apostolic Constitutions, in a passage relied upon by Bunsen² as a proof of their Eastern origin: *Καὶ γυναῖκες κατακελυμμέναι τὴν κεφαλὴν, ὡς ἀρμόζει, γυναικῶν τάξει προσερχέσθωσαν*³.

This was also a custom of the early Gallican Church, where a head-covering (dominicale) was ordered to be worn by women at the time of communion, by the 42nd canon of the Council of Auxerre⁴.

In later times we hear of a church in North Munster into which no woman, or any animal of the feminine gender, ever entered but it immediately died⁵. There was another church where Irish women were prohibited from going near the altar, or taking the chalice in their hands: 'Nulla femina ad altare Domini accedat, nec calicem Domini tanget⁶.' The latter part of this direction proves it to be of considerable antiquity. It occurs in a 'Sermo sinodalis parrotianis prespeteris,' but must surely apply only to some particular monastic altars. Yet injunctions of a similar character were not confined to Ireland. The Gallican Constitutions of Theodulf Bishop of Orleans (A.D. 802-11) ordered 'ut feminae ad altare non accedant¹. Women were not allowed to enter the chancel of Durham Cathedral within a line of blue marble which ran across the nave². In a collection of tenth-century Anglo-Saxon laws the Gallican rule of Theodulf was incorporated and expanded thus: 'Eac we beodað þæt þæm tidum þe mæsse-preost mæssan singe þæt nan wif ne ʒenealæce þam weofode, ac standen on hyra stedum, and þe mæsse preost þær æt hiom onfō þære ofrunge þe hiʒ Gode ofrian wyllath³.'

§ 26. RESERVATION.—The consecrated elements were reserved for the use of the sick or absent, to whom they were afterwards conveyed. A person going to procure Communion for the sick was exempt from liability to arrest and from the law of distress⁴. Special warnings were directed against the loss of the reserved Sacrament from a boat or a bridge or while on horseback⁵. It was carried in a vessel called a 'chrismal,' or in a satchel suspended from the neck⁶; and various penalties were assigned by St. Columbanus for dropping it accidentally, or for leaving it behind through negligence⁷. It is not always clear whether these directions contemplate the Eucharist being conveyed to the sick, or worn as an amulet about the person, but in the absence of proof of the existence of the latter custom we may conclude that they are connected with administration to the sick⁸. The reserved Eucharist was at a very early date placed on a person's breast when he was buried, as in the case of St. Cuthbert, whose body was found 'oblatis super sanctum corpus positis'.¹ May we infer from the use of the plural number here that the reservation took place in both kinds, just as Dr. Rock infers from the employment of the singular number in another case that in Anglo-Saxon days the reservation was of one kind only?² The decolorisation of the reserved Sacrament alluded to as a test of its corruption in the Regula St. Columbani, cap. xv, possibly points to the twofold but conjoint reservation of both elements³. The Eastern custom of simultaneous administration of both reserved elements is implied in the cases of sick or death-bed Communion previously referred to⁴, and in the Celtic remains of services for the Communion of the Sick in the Books of Deer, Dimma, Mulling, and Stowe⁵.

³ Anglice, 'We also command that when the priest sings mass, no women draw near the altar, but stand in their places, and let the mass priest there receive from them the offerings which they are ready to make to God.' A great deal of information as to the mediæval custom on this head is collected by Canon Simmons (Lay Folks' Mass Book, pp. 233-236), from which it appears that such injunctions had reference generally to the approach to the altar for offering alms (or for vesting the altar, B. Thorpe, Ancient Laws, folio edit. 1840, pp. 303, 375), not for the purpose of communicating.

§ 27. EULOGIAE.—It was a primitive Eastern custom to bless a loaf of bread at the conclusion of the Liturgy, which was then cut up into small pieces with a knife specially consecrated for that purpose, and distributed to the congregation, who came forward and received it at the priest's hands; there is ample evidence for the existence of such a custom universally prevailing in the primitive and mediaeval Church, where it was variously known by the names of Eulogiae, Panis Benedictus, and *Pain Béni*⁶.

There are proofs of its use in the Celtic Church. Adamnan states that at St. Kenneth's monastery at Aghaboe in Ireland there was a table in the refectory on which the Eulogiae were cut up for distribution. The passage is curious, as showing that in Ireland in the sixth century it was customary to partake of the Eulogiae, not in connexion with the Eucharist in the oratory, but at the afternoon meal in the refectory¹. The same practice existed at Iona in Scotland², and, as has been inferred from a passage in the old hymn attributed to St. Columba, under the same conditions of time and place as at Aghaboe³. At Lindisfarne, in St. Cuthbert's time, it was distributed at the third hour, after Mass⁴.

In the continental monasteries of St. Columbanus it was distributed on Sundays and holy days after Mass. It is recorded of the saintly and humble Ermenfried, who presided over the Columban monastery of Cusance (625-670), that he always kissed the hands of the poorest persons before distribution⁵. Its unworthy reception was forbidden by special enactment⁶.

§ 28. FREQUENCY OF CELEBRATION.—There does not appear to have been a daily Eucharist in the Celtic Church, but only on Sundays, saints' days, and days specially appointed by the head of the monastery.

By the old law of distress in Ireland a stay of two days was granted in the case of church furniture, and the requisites of the Mass, though it be not celebrated every day⁷.

On Sundays.—When four distinguished Irish saints visited St. Columba at Iona and requested that he would celebrate in their presence he complied with their request, as usual on Sunday¹. The same saint is described as celebrating on the last Sunday (June 2, 597) before his death, which took place on the Saturday following². Cuminius in his Penitential defends and explains these Sunday celebrations by a reference to the custom of the Greeks³. In the eighth century in Ireland there was a seven years' probation for admission into the society of the Culdees. In the first year the novice was not allowed to communicate at all, only to be present at the sacrifice. In the second year his communions began, and gradually increased in number, till they mounted to communion every Sunday in the seventh year⁴.

On Saints' Days.—We read of St. Columba at Iona giving special orders for the celebration of the Eucharist in commemoration of St. Brendan⁵ and of Columbanus, and it is noted that the latter order was carried out in detail, as if it had been a regular and recognised holy-day⁶. Passengers on their way to Iona pray that they may reach the island in time to celebrate the Eucharist on the day dedicated to St. Columba and St. Baithene, on whose joint festival (June 9) the wished-for Eucharist is offered⁷. In Ireland, in the sixth century, we read of celebration on a holy-day in the church of St. Finnian at Movilla, county Down⁸. In St. Bridget's church at Kildare, early in the sixth century, there was a celebration on Sundays and on the vigils of the feasts of Apostles¹. In the mother church of every Irish monastery in the eighth century there was an offering upon every altar on Sundays and solemnities².

St. Gall ordered a special celebration in commemoration of St. Columbanus on receiving intelligence of his death³, and no doubt from that day forward the festival of St. Columbanus was added to the Kalendar of St. Gall.

§ 29. HOURS OF CELEBRATION.—Mass was always celebrated at an early, generally at a very early, hour of the day. The Mass of St. Columbanus was celebrated by St. Columba at Iona 'in the morning⁴,' by St. Gall in Switzerland 'at daybreak⁵.' That of St. Brendan at Iona was 'in the very early morning⁶.' The solemn Mass of St. Baithene was sung at the later hour of noon⁷. An early hour was ordered in the continental Irish monasteries under a heavy penalty⁸.

In all these passages, as usually in the language of the seventh century, the word 'Missa' means the Liturgy proper, and such phrases as 'Missarum sollennia' and 'sacra Eucharistiae ministeria' are used as synonymous expressions, but the word Missa is also used occasionally to denote any sacred office. The last service at which St. Columba was present is called the 'vespertina Dominicae noctis Missa⁹.' This service was evidently not an evening communion, but 'Vigiliae nocturnae' or 'nocturns.' The word 'Missale' or 'Missal' was also used to denote not only the text of the Mass itself, but also other Office Books. The book which in the Irish life of St. Columba is called the Book of the Gospels, but which is no longer extant, is called by Colgan in his Latin translation 'Missarum Liber.'

§ 30. DUPLICATING.—Priests were allowed at Iona, in the seventh century, to celebrate twice, and by implication, as a general rule, not more than twice on the same day¹.

§ 31. PATEN AND CHALICE.—The paten (called 'discus' or patena², 'patinus'³) and chalice (called 'Calix Domini⁴, 'vas⁵, 'laguncula⁶, 'coilech⁷, 'cailech⁸') were probably originally made of glass. A stone altar with four glass chalices upon it is mentioned by later writers as having been discovered by St. Patrick in a cave, and as evidence of the existence of Christianity in Ireland before the arrival of that saint⁹. The cups and patens brought by that saint on his arrival from beyond the sea were possibly of the same material¹⁰, for there is testimony as to the early use of glass chalices in Gaul¹¹. Bronze chalices were used at a little later period, in the Irish continental monasteries. St. Gall refused to use silver vessels for the altar, saying that St. Columbanus was accustomed to offer the sacrifice in vessels of bronze, in memory of the fact that his Saviour was fastened to the cross with brazen nails¹².

A golden chalice, a relic of Iona, perhaps coeval with St. Columba himself, once existed, but has in recent times been unfortunately lost¹. A similar fate has attended the relics of St. Kieran (sixth century). When his grave was opened A.D. 1791 his relics comprised beads strung on brass wire, a crozier, a hollow brass ball which opened, resembling the ball (possibly a pome) in the hands of one of the figures on the Breac Moedog (Archaeol. xliii. pl. 18), and a paten and chalice².

§ 32. FAN.—The only evidence for the use of this well-known Eastern accessory of liturgical worship is derived from illuminations in ancient books. There is a 'flabellum' or fan represented in the right hand of St. Matthew in a Hiberno-Saxon MS. of the Gospels (eighth century) at Treves³, also in the hands of the angels in the monogram of the Book of Kells (sixth century, Irish), where they seem to be constructed of thin plates of metal surrounded by little bells like those used by the Maronites⁴.

Plentiful evidence of the early use of the flabellum in Western Christendom is adduced by Gerbert⁵, and especially as to Gaul in Smith's Dictionary of Christian Antiquities⁶. In a thirteenth-century illumination in a French MS., a facsimile of which is given in Bastard's *Peintures et Ornaments*⁷, a priest vested in an ample chasuble is represented in the act of consecration at Mass. Behind him stands the deacon in a dalmatic, waving a flabellum composed of peacocks' feathers.

Knife.—A knife is depicted in the left hand of St. Matthew in the Treves Gospels⁸, and in the right hand of the right-hand figure in the monogram of the Garland of Howth⁹. It is impossible without further evidence to decide for what purpose this knife was employed, although its character as a sacred symbol is evident. It may have been used as the holy spear (λόγχη) is used in the Eastern Church, for the ceremonial piercing of the Amnos and severing the host into portions during the Liturgy¹, or as the knife specially set apart in the Anglo-Saxon Church for the purpose of cutting up the Eulogiae².

§ 33. SIGN OF THE CROSS. Frequent mention is made of the use of the sign of the cross for various purposes by the Scottish monks at Iona and by Irish monks under St. Columbanus. It was the sign ordinarily attending the sacerdotal act of benediction. We may infer therefore that it was employed in every Celtic act of consecration, although there is no direct evidence extant to that effect. There are directions for its use once over the chalice in St. Gall MS. 1394³; once in the Rite of Unction in the Book of Dimma⁴, and in the Stowe Missal⁵; once in the Ordo Baptismi, and five times in the Gelasian Canon in the latter volume⁶. Instances of its use at Iona have been collected by Dr. Reeves in his edition of Adamnan⁷. It was made over the pail before milking⁸, over tools before using them⁹, over a spoon¹⁰, over a lantern¹¹. It was considered effectual to banish evil spirits¹², to restrain a river monster¹³, to stop a wild boar¹⁴, to unlock a door¹⁵, to endow a pebble with healing virtue¹⁶, or bread¹⁷, or water¹⁸, or salt¹⁹. It deprived a spear²⁰ or a dagger²¹ of its power of hurting, etc. etc. In the first eight of these instances the sign of the cross is mentioned, in the latter seven it is implied in the word 'benedixit.' It was made 'extensa,' or 'elevata manus,' or 'manus protensione.' There are numerous allusions to its use in all the later lives of the saints.

§ 34. FASTING.—There is no direct evidence of the practice of fasting reception of the Communion, but we may infer it from the early hour at which the Eucharist was celebrated¹, and from the prominent position assigned to fasting generally in the regulations of the Celtic Church.

Wednesday and Friday were observed as fast-days at Iona, but a dispensation was granted by the abbot in the case of the reception of strangers², &c.; also at Lindisfarne, where the Celtic custom of fasting till three o'clock (except in Easter-tide) had been introduced by St. Aidan from Iona³. The Rule of St. Columbanus prescribed the same custom for the Irish continental monasteries⁴. In the Rule of the Irish Culdees (eighth century) skimmed milk was allowed on St. Patrick's Day even if it fell on a Wednesday or Friday⁵. The non-eating of flesh on Wednesdays and Fridays was one of the customary laws by which the soul-friend (an meara) bound the Irish people⁶.

Lent (dies quadragesimales) was observed at Iona as a season of preparation for Easter⁷. The severity of the Lenten Rule may be gathered from the statement of Bishop Cedd that the strict rule which he observed had been learned by him in the Columban monastery in which he had been brought up⁸.

sion, were observed, with fasting up to the ninth hour, and their observation was perpetuated in the Anglo-Saxon Church by the 16th canon of the Council of Clovesho (A.D. 747), which expressly refers to their observation not as a custom derived from Rome, but as a traditional custom of the country: 'Sexto decimo condixerunt capitulo: Ut Laetaniae, id est rogationes, a clero omnique populo his diebus cum magna reverentia agantur, id est, die septimo kalendarum Maiarum, juxta ritum Romanae Ecclesiae, quae et Letania major apud eam vocatur. Et item quoque, secundum morem priorum nostrorum, tres dies ante Ascensionem Domini in caelos cum jejuniis usque ad horam nonam et Missarum celebratione venerantur¹,' &c.

The wording of this canon is noteworthy. The observance of the Rogation Days was a Gallican custom, unknown at that date in the Roman Church, into which it was first introduced by Leo III (795-816); and their recognition in the British Church, and their perpetuation from that source in the Anglo-Saxon Church, if we may see an allusion to that Church in the words 'piores nostri,' is a link in the proof of the early connection between the British and Gallican Churches.

The connection of a special fast with the Celtic rite of the consecration of churches has been already pointed out².

§ 35. CONFESSION.—There is plentiful evidence of the practice of confession in the Celtic Church, but there is no trace of its connection with or of its use as a preparation for the celebration or reception of the Eucharist. Gildas uses the general expressions 'poenitentiae medicamen' and 'ut peccata sua delerentur humilitate confessionis³.' The ordinary Irish title for a confessor was 'anmcara' or 'soul's friend,' and every person seems to have attached some priest to himself in that capacity.

³ Epist., H. and S. i. 78, 80.

St. Donnan of Eig requested St. Columba to act as his anmcara. 'This Donnan went to Columcille to make him his soul's friend; upon which Columcille said to him, "I shall not be soul's friend to a company of red martyrdom; for thou shalt come to red martyrdom, and thy people with thee." And it was so fulfilled¹.' St. Columba is said to have been 'anmcara' to Aidan King of Dalriada A.D. 574².

Adamnan acted as anmcara to Finnsnechta, who became monarch of Ireland A.D. 675³. Minute regulations about confession are laid down in the Irish Rule of the Culdees (pp. 88-90). In some of the later entries in the Annals of Ulster the office of chief confessor is named⁴. There are various regulations on the subject of penance and confession in the Welsh laws of Howel⁵. In the Black Book of Caermarthen an irreligious Welshman is taunted with the question, 'What gavest thou of thy wealth before private confession⁶?'

Three points are worthy of note with regard to the practice of confession in the Celtic Church.

(a) It was public rather than private.

We read how a certain Irishman (de Scotia), named Feachnaus, touched with remorse for some crime committed by him, came to Iona, and falling at St. Columba's feet, lamenting bitterly, 'confessed his sins before all that were there present.' Whereupon St. Columba, weeping together with him, absolved him in these words: 'Rise up, my son, and be comforted; thy sins which thou hast committed are forgiven, because, as it is written, a contrite and a humble heart God doth not despise⁷.'

⁷ 'Feachnaus, cum fletu et lamento, ante pedes ejus [sc. Columbae] ingeniculus flexis genibus amarissime ingemuit, et coram omnibus qui ibidem inerant

On another occasion, when St. Columba was visiting the little monastery of Trevet, co. Meath, a priest who had been chosen by the brethren to celebrate the Eucharist on account of his supposed superior sanctity, was conscience-stricken by some words uttered by St. Columba, and 'was compelled to confess his sin in the presence of them all'.¹

An old Irish canon speaks of confession of sins in the presence of priest and people².

(b) It was optional rather than compulsory.

In early Irish law there is frequent mention of the anmcara, and of confession to him being profitable (not necessary), and of his power to impose penances, such as a pilgrimage after a murder³.

The direction on the subject in the Penitential of Cuminian ran in these words: 'Confessio autem Deo soli ut agatur, si necesse est, licebit⁴.' It was perhaps owing to its optional character that the practice of confession seems to have dropped into disuse in the later Irish Church. Alcuin writing to certain brethren in Ireland (eighth century) urged the practice of confession very strongly on men and women, secular and religious, young and old⁵. In another letter he complained peccantias confitetur suas. Sanctus tum, cum eo pariter illacrymatus, ad eum ait, Surge fili, et consolare; dimissa sunt tua quae commisisti peccamina; quia sicut scriptum est, Cor contritum et humiliatum Deus non spernit.' Adamnan Vit. S. Col. i. 30.

³ Senchus Mor, iii. 39, 73.

that 'it is reported that none of the laity are willing to make their confession to the priests, whom we believe together with the holy Apostles to have received the power of binding and loosing from God in Christ¹.'

St. Bernard asserted that the custom of going to confession had died out in Ireland in the twelfth century, and that its restoration was one among the reforms of St. Malachi².

(c) It was not the custom to pronounce absolution until after the penance assigned had been fulfilled.

An early Irish canon assigned a year of penitence as the punishment for certain crimes. When the year was accomplished the penitent might come with witnesses and receive absolution from the priest³. Bede records how an Irish youth named Adamnanus made confession to a priest, and on hearing the penance imposed complained of it, not on account of its severity, but because he wished more quickly to receive absolution. The penance had been imposed for an indefinite time, and absolution was deferred until the priest should see him again. No second interview ever took place, in consequence of the sudden death of the priest in his native country (Ireland), whither a sudden emergency had caused him to return, and Adamnanus continued to comply with the conditions of the penance for the rest of his natural life⁴.

This regulation, although it led to a practical inconvenience in the case of Adamnanus, is more in accordance with the discipline of the primitive Church than the modern

³ The presence of this question as a typical question to be put to an Irish penitent corroborates the dark picture drawn by St. Bernard of the morals of the Irish; p. 150. n. 2. Statements about the prevalence of incest in Ireland in the eleventh century are also made by Lanfranc Archbishop of Canterbury, in letters addressed to Gothric King of Dublin (Ep. xxvi; Ussher's Works, iv. 490), to Terdelvacus King of Ireland (Ep. xxvii; ib. 493); by Anselm, in letters to Muriardachus King of Ireland (Ep. xxxv; ib. p. 521; Ep. xxxvi; ib. p. 523); by Giraldus Cambrensis, writing A.D. 1185; Topograph. Hibern. distinct. iii. cap. 19. The first canon of the Synod of Cashel, A.D. 1172, is directed against the same irregularity (Mansi, Concil. vol. xxii. p. 134). But the early Irish ecclesiastical law of marriage was strict; Canones S. Patricii, ii Synod. xxv–xxviii. Compare the decision of Columba in a matrimonial dispute in the island of Rechrea, off the coast of Antrim; Adamnan, Vit. S. Col. ii. 41. It is also noteworthy that the same question is directed to be put to the penitent in a tenth-century German Office published by Gerbert (vol. ii. p. 25, ex Cod. MS. Bibl. Caes. Vindob. Theol. No. 685), and in an almost identical French Ordo Penitentiae printed in Martene, de Antiq. Eccl. Rit. lib. i. cap. vi. art. vii. ordo vi, ex MS. Gellonensi, saec. ix aut x, in diocesi Lodevensi. Possibly therefore the question was a necessity of the times rather than indicative of any special degradation in the morality of Ireland. It should also be remembered that marriages with persons occupying positions of spiritual affinity as well as with near kindred fell under the designation of incest. (Hook, W. F., Archbishops of Canterbury, i. 372. § 7.) The charge of 'incest' was frequently brought against the Anglo-Saxons in the ninth century. (Lingard, A. S. Church, ii. 220.)

CHAPTER III.

RELIQUIAE CELTICAE LITURGICAE.

§ 1. NO TRACES OF A VERNACULAR LITURGY.

THERE is no trace of a vernacular Liturgy having been in use in any portion of the Celtic Church; but in the absence of any liturgical remains of an earlier date than the seventh century, only negative evidence can be produced on this point. The undoubtedly Celtic liturgical fragments of a later date which have survived are in the Latin language, relieved by an occasional vernacular rubric, as in the case of the St. Gall MSS., the Stowe Missal, and the Books of Deer, Dimma, and Mulling¹. But there is not only an absence of direct proof, but also of any indirect evidence which points to a vernacular Liturgy having once existed, if we except a possible interpretation of the ‘ritus barbarus,’ abolished in Scotland by Queen Margaret².

As far as the earliest British Church is concerned many facts suggest a partially Latin origin. The most important British bishoprics belonged to the capitals of Roman provinces—York, London, and possibly Caerleon. The earliest Christian martyrs in Britain bore Roman, or at least not Celtic names—Albanus, Julius, Aaron. The earliest antiquarian remains of British Christianity are connected with Roman stations, as at Canterbury, Dover, Lyminge, Richborough, &c. Ptolemy, writing in the earlier part of the second century (c. A.D. 120), enumerates under their Latin titles fifty-six cities then existing in Britain¹; Marcianus in the third century reckons fifty-nine². Other names of towns have been collected from the pages of Asser, Nennius, Henry of Huntingdon, and the Saxon Chronicle³. The walls by which some of these places are still surrounded, the ruins of theatres, villas, baths, and other public and private buildings, the vases, coins, inscriptions discovered from time to time, prove that they once contained a flourishing Roman population. Possibly, therefore, the earliest Christian Church in these islands consisted of converts to Christianity among its Roman invaders and of such natives as were brought into immediate connection with them⁴. Gradually, as the Roman power dwindled away, the Church spread over the population of these islands; but in quite early days Latin, and not any form of Gaelic, may have been, if not the vernacular language, at least a language understood by all the members of the Christian Church in Britain. Tacitus informs us that the Roman language was adopted by the leading inhabitants of Britain under the 'policy' of Agricola⁵. Most of the writings of the British, Scottish, and Irish authors of the first six centuries⁶, all the extant Psalters and Books of the Gospels, and the few liturgical fragments which have been preserved, are written in the Latin language by scribes who not only understood what they wrote, but were so far masters of the language in which they were writing as to have compiled a special British and Irish revision of the old Latin text of the Bible for use in their own Church⁷. The ecclesiastical use of the ancient Celtic tongue, if this theory is correct, commenced when the Church began to include among its members and to receive into its priesthood persons who were ignorant of Latin; but even then it was confined to the rubrics, and to sermons or addresses. A large fragment of a sermon on self-denial and compassion in the old Irish language from the Codex Camaracensis (eighth century) is printed in Zeuss, *Grammatica Celtica*¹. Vernacular sermons are in existence for the Feast of All Saints², on the Beatitudes³, Judgment and Resurrection⁴.

The above is virtually Mr. Haddan's theory of the Latin character of the earliest Church in Britain. A counter theory of its non-Latin and purely Celtic character has been more recently advanced by Mr. Brewer, and supported by the following considerations:—(1) Christianity was not as yet (second and part of third centuries) tolerated by Roman law, and those who under Roman law had just been Facsimiles of some of their pages are given in The National MSS. of Ireland, part i. plates i-vi; Dublin, 1874. The evidence for a special Scoto-Britannic version is collected in H. and S. i. 170-198.

Bede says that, through the study of the sacred Scriptures, Latin had become 'a common language for the Angles, Britons, Picts, and Irish;' Hist. Eccl. lib. i. cap. 1. There are traces of the use of Greek. Greek words are introduced into the Hymnus Sancti Comgilli, and in the Antiphon. Benchor. (ch. iii, § 11). Occasional Graecisms occur in Adamnan's Life of Columba, and in the writings of other early Irish saints. Examples of Hiberno-Greek characters are given in Keller's Bilder, &c., plates xii, xiii. In the Book of Armagh Greek characters occur frequently, e.g. in the Gospel of St. Matthew, where the Latin text of the Lord's Prayer is written in Greek letters. The same is also found in Codex A, an eighth-century Irish MS. Vita S. Columbae, by Adamnan, of which a facsimile is given in Reeve's edit. plate 3. The colophon at the end of the Second Book is likewise in Greek. Ib. Preface, p. xiv; see pp. 153, 354. There is a story extant of St. Brendan finding a Missal written in Greek characters in the Welsh monastery of St. Gildas: 'Et habebat Sanctus Gylldas missalem librum scriptum Graecis litteris, et possitus est ille liber super altare. Et custos templi ex iussione sancti Gildae dixit sancto Brendano; uir Dei, praecipit tibi sanctus senex noster ut offeras corpus Christi; ecce altare hic et librum Graecis litteris scriptum et canta in eo sicut abbas noster. Aperiensque sanctus Brendanus librum ait: Demonstra michi Domine ihesu istas litteras ignotas sicut aperuisti ostia clausa ante nos. Profecto possibilia sunt omnia credenti. Illico iam litteras graecas sciuit sanctus Brendanus sicuti Latinas quas didicit ab infancia.' Vita S. Brendani, cap. xv, in the Liber Kilkenniensis.

trampled upon would hardly seek Romans for the materials of a Church. (2) Tertullian's words imply that Christians were numerous where the Roman arms had not reached: 'Britannorum inaccessa Romanis loca Christo vero subdita¹.' (3) The founders of the British Church had come from Celtic districts of Gaul; in many instances they themselves probably were Celts, or mixed Celts, and therefore mostly attracted to the Celtic blood of Britain. (4) The subsequent history, which must have sprung from these beginnings, is the history of a Celtic Church, the Roman architecture of existing remains proving no more than that when Britons built churches they built as those great builders the Romans taught them².

It may be concluded that both elements, the Latin and the Celtic, coexisted in the British Church of the third and fourth centuries, but exactly how far this composite character affected its Liturgy there is no documentary evidence, and it is a chimera to expect that there ever will be such evidence forthcoming to show.

The Roman Canon of the Mass seems certainly, but not universally, to have been introduced into the Irish portion of the Celtic Church in the course of the ninth century. This is proved by its presence in the earliest extant Irish Missal, where it is largely intermingled with fragments of an earlier pre-Roman Use³. There are signs of local friendly intercourse beginning to grow up between the Irish and Anglo-Saxon Churches about this time, and of the spread of Anglo-Saxon influence in the former Church. Among such signs are the introduction of the names of the second, third, and fourth archbishops of Canterbury among the Irish saints commemorated in the Canon of the Mass⁴, although the appeal of one of them (Laurence) to the Irish bishops to conform to Roman usage in the seventh century had been ineffectual⁵. We may also notice the reference to Roman authority in early Irish canons (late seventh and eighth centuries), where such expressions abound as 'Synodus Romana' or 'Romani dicunt,' 'Regula Canonica dicit Romana,' 'Disputatio Romana,' 'Institutio Romana.' Extracts from Greek, African, and even native early Irish conciliar decrees are sometimes erroneously quoted under the above headings. But the earliest extant MS. copies of these canons vary between the ninth and eleventh centuries, when the desire of assimilation to Rome, the habit of referring to Roman authority, and the spread of Roman influence had become strong and more wide-spread.

§ 2. CORNISH FRAGMENT—MISSA S. GERMANI.

The following fragment of an ancient Cornish Liturgy was written in the ninth century on fol. 1 of a MS. in the Bodleian Library, No. 572. It was composed after the Cornish Church had fallen under Anglo-Saxon influence, and has no claim to be considered as a genuine Celtic Missa either in form or substance.

§ 3. WELSH FRAGMENTS. MISSA DE S. DAVID.

These so-called Welsh fragments have no real claim to be called Celtic. The oldest, the 'Missa de S. David,' is based upon the Lectiones taken from Ricemarch's Life, and can hardly have been compiled before the Welsh Church had become Normanised or Anglicised.

The following Missa is written by the original scribe in MS. Cott. Vesp. A. xiv, a MS. of the latter part of the twelfth century, after the conclusion of the Life of St. David by Ricemarch. Fol. 69 b.

MISSA DE EODEM.

[ORATIO.]

Deus, qui beatum confessorem tuum David atque pontificem, angelo nuntiante, Patricio prophetante, triginta annos antequam nasceretur predixisti; quesumus, ut cuius memoriam recolimus, eius intercessione ad eterna gaudia perueniamus, per secula seculorum². Per.

nisi mihi novacula cum fornice pectineque detur, et ad patrem tuum carnalem tibi dare liceat. Mox ut audivit puer, obedivit verbo senioris sancti, et ad avum suum patremque suum carnalem Guorthigernum perrexit, et dixit illi: Pater meus es tu, caput meum tonde, et comam capitis mei pecte. Ille autem siluit, et puero respondere noluit; sed surrexit iratusque est vehementer, et ut a facie S. Germani fugeret quaerebat: et maledictus est, et damnatus a B. Germano et omni consilio Britonum.' Nennius, Hist. Britonum, cap. xxxix.

SECRETA.

Hostias laudis et preces deuotionis, quas tibi in honore beati confessoris tui Daud atque pontificis, omnipotens deus, deferimus, placatus intende; et quod nostrum non optinet meritum, tua clementia et illius pro nobis frequens intercessio efficiat. Per.

POSTCOMMUNIO.

Repleti, domine, participatione sacramenti, quesumus, ut sancti Daud confessoris tui atque pontificis meritis, cuius gloriosam celebramus festiuitatem, ineffabilis misericordie tue patro(c)i(n)ia sentiamus. Per.

§ 4 a. WELSH FRAGMENTS. ORATIO DE S. THELYAO.

This collect is written in a fourteenth-century hand on the fly-leaf at the end of the Liber Landavensis, now in the possession of P. B. Davies-Cooke, Esq. of Owston in Yorkshire.

Omnipotens sempiterne deus, qui de beato corpore sancti thelyai confessoris tui atque pontificis tria corpora consecrasti, et per illud miraculum pacem et concordiam inter inimicos reformasti; concede propitius per eius suffragia pietatis tue ueniam consequamur, per dominum nostrum. amen¹.

§ 4 b. WELSH FRAGMENTS. MISSA DE S. TEILAO.

This Missa is written in a fifteenth-century hand upon a vacant space at the end of a MS. Sarum Missal in the Cambridge University Library, MS. Add. 451, which belonged formerly to the Hungerford family, who owned property on the marches of Wales.

[MISSA] DE SANCTO TEILAO.

Omnipotens sempiterne deus, virtutum omnium fons et origo, qui per beatum theilaum gloriosissimum confessorem tuum atque pontificem ingentis vipere seuisiam in mare demersisti; da, quesumus, vt antiqui hostis nequicia superata, diuini amoris igne succensi, pie petitionis consequamur effectum.

fol. 198 a, Brit. Mus., and is printed in the Camden Soc. 1880, New Ser. xxvi. p. 36. It is the collect of the Sarum Breviary, March 1.

SECRETA.

Beati theliai confessoris tui atque pontificis supplicatione, munus oblatum, domine, quesumus fiat nobis imperpetuum salutare, per christum dominum.

POSTCOMMUNIO.

Quesumus, omnipotens deus, vt meritis reparati sanctissimi confessoris tui atque pontificis theilai, pro quo tue gentis belligere munitia tria funera mirifice prodidisti, triplici seueritate hostium superata, mereamur indiuidue trinitatis percipere uisionem, per dominum.

§ 5. SCOTTISH FRAGMENT. BOOK OF DEER.

Dr. Lingard writing in 1844 asserted that we had no means of judging whether the sacrificial service of the Scottish missionaries varied from that of the Roman Church¹. But since that date a single liturgical fragment has been discovered, belonging to the Celtic period of the Scottish Church, which, though brief, exhibits sufficiently distinctive marks to enable us to answer the question which Dr. Lingard considered insoluble. It is a portion of the Service for the Communion of the Sick written before the year 1130 on a vacant space in the Book of Deer (ff. 28 b, 29 a), an early Evangelium in the Cambridge University Library². This MS. was published by the Spalding Club, 1869, under the editorship of Dr. J. Stuart. A good account of it is given in the preface to that work. There is a close coincidence between many expressions in the short Eucharistic Office which it contains and those of the Mozarabic and Gallican Missals, and there is a marked deviation from certain invariable features of the Roman Liturgy. Therefore this fragment, short as it is, affords evidence that the Scoto-Pictish Liturgy of the Columban Church in Scotland belonged to the 'Ephesine' and not to the 'Petrine' family of Liturgies. The reasons for this conclusion are given in detail in the following notes.

ITEM ORATIO ANTE DOMINICAM ORATIONEM.

Crētor naturarum omnium¹ deus et parens uniuersarum in celo et terra originum, hās trementis populi tui relegiosas preces ex illo inaccessibileis lucis trono tuo² suscipe, et inter-hiruphín et zaraphín indefessas circumstantium laudes exaudi spei non ambigue preces³.

Pater noster quies usque in finem.

Libera nós, domine, a malo, domine christe ihesu, custodi nos semper in omni opere bona, fons et auctor omnium bonorum deus euacua nos uitiis, et reple nos uirtutibus bonis. per te christe ihesu⁴.

*Hisund dubar sacorfaicc dau*⁵.

Corpus cum sanguine domini nostri ihesu christi sanitas sit tibi in uitam perpetua et salutem⁶.

² Compare the petition, 'Respice nos de excelso throno gloriæ tuæ.' Mis. Moz. 312 c.

³ The Roman Liturgy, in all its forms, has a fixed introduction, 'Præceptis salutaribus moniti,' &c., and conclusion, 'Libera nos, quæsumus, ab omnibus malis,' &c.; which never vary. The very fact of there being even a fixed introduction is enough to show a connection in remote times with what is called the Ephesine family. In the Ephesine family, on the other hand, the introduction and embolismus vary with every service. The fact alone would be sufficient to establish a generic difference between the Petrine Liturgy and the Celtic Services preserved here in the Scottish Book of Deer, and in the Irish Books of Dimma, p. 169, Mulling, p. 172, Stowe Missal, § 14, St. Gall MS. 1394, p. 177.

Stowe Missal, p. 224. Both consecrated elements seem to have been administered at once. For evidence as to the prevalence of this custom of intinction in the West between the seventh and twelfth centuries, see Scudamore, W. E., Notit. Eucharist. second edit. p. 705. Compare the formula of joint administration in the Syriac Lit. of St. James, and in the Armenian Lit. (Hammond, C. E., Lit. E. and W. pp. 81, 165).

The same MS. contains at the close of the volume, and in the handwriting of the original scribe, the Apostles' Creed, which runs as follows:—

Fol. 85. a. Credo indeum patrem omni potentem, creatorem celi et terre. Et inhesum christum filium eius, unicum dominum nostrum, qui conceptus est de spiritu sancto, natus ex maria uirgine, passus sub pontio pylato, crucifixus et sepultus. Descendit ad inferna. Tertia die resurrexit a mortuis, ascendit in celum, sedet ad dexteram dei patris omni potentis, inde uenturus est iudicare uiuos et mortuos. Credo et in spiritum sanctum, sanctamque ecclesiam catholicam, sanctorum communionem, remissionem peccatorum, carnis resurrectionis, uitam eternam. amen¹.

Immediately below this Creed the scribe has written a rhyming couplet in his own language.

No other MS. liturgical remains known to exist in Scotland are connected with the Scoto-Celtic Church.

(1) The Arbuthnott Missal [Liber Ecclesiae beati Terrenani de Arbuthnott] is a Sarum Missal with certain Scottish additions and modifications, written in 1491 by an ecclesiastic named Sybbald, Vicar of Arbuthnot. It was printed at the Pitsligo Press, 1864, under the editorship of the late Bishop of Brechin (A. P. Forbes), and his brother the Rev. G. H. Forbes.

(2) The Celtic Kalendar printed by Bishop Forbes (Kalendar of Scottish Saints, pp. 79–92) is a late and unimportant document. The Antiquae Litaniae published in the same work (Appendix to Preface, No. iii. pp. lvi–lxv; H. & S. ii. i. 278) belong in their present form to the sixteenth century, though they may contain portions of a genuine earlier Culdee document.

(3) The Drummond and Rosslyn Missals will be referred to hereafter in connection with the Irish Church².

§ 6. IRISH FRAGMENTS. BOOK OF DIMMA.

The following 'Missa de Infirmis' is written between the Gospels of St. Luke and St. John on ff. 52-54 of the 'Book of Dimma,' a Book of the Gospels, preserved in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin¹. The writer having been identified with one Dimma, who lived in the middle of the seventh century, the MS. has on that account been attributed to that date.

The remarks in the Notes appended to the 'Missa de Infirmis' in the Scottish 'Book of Deer²,' proving its Ephesine character, apply equally to the Missae which have survived in the ancient Irish Books of Dimma and Mulling, and in the Stowe Missal. Additional indications of the same connection are noted below.

¹ The word 'plasma' is not found in the Roman, but is frequently used in the Mozarabic and Gallican Liturgies; as in the exorcismus in the Ordo Baptismi in Sacram. Gall., Mab. edit. p. 324; Mis. Mozar. p. 314; also in a collect in Anglo-Saxon Missal of Leofric (Surtees Soc. lxi. p. 348). It also occurs in this same collect in the Stowe Missal, p. 220. It is interesting to find it in the hymn assigned for the first Vespers, 'In natali unius Apostoli,' in the Sarum Breviary, 'Salua, Redemptor, plasma tuum nobile' (line 5), of which Daniel says, 'Videtur carmen Galliae et Angliae fuisse proprium.' Lib. Armacan. fol. 19 a.

These lines, containing a portion of the Roman Canon, with the words 'diesque nostros,' &c. said to have been inserted by St. Gregory, are interesting as proving that the Roman Canon in its Gregorian form was known in Armagh early in the ninth century.

The following collect is written at the end of St. Matthew's Gospel. Though intended for private rather than liturgical use, it may be added here for the sake of comparison with the Anglican Collect for St. Matthew's Day :—

Deus, immensae clementiae atque ineffabilis pietatis, submissa uoce rogare presumo, ut quomodo ex puplicano mattheum preclarum apostolum fecisti, ita per missericordiam tuam arcessere me digneris adperfectam in hoc saeculo uiam, atque anguelicis hierusalem caelestis choris collocare, ut perpetuo solio infinitae laetitiae ymnidicis archangelorum laudibus conlaudare te merear, per unigenitum filium tuum, qui tecum uiuit in unitate spiritus sancti, per omnia saecula saeculorum. Amen.

§ 9. IRISH FRAGMENTS. ST. GALL MS. 1394.

At St. Gall there is the following fragment of an Irish Sacramentary, supposed to be written in the ninth century, and now forming one of a collection of fragments marked MS. 1394. A facsimile of the original was sent from St. Gall to Mr. C. Purton Cooper, and was printed by him¹:—

century catalogue of MSS. in the monastery of St. Gall. This Missal has been lost, but it is possible that this fragment is a portion of it (Keller, F., Bilder und Schriftzüge, p. 61). In Haenel's Catalogus Librorum MSS. Monasterii B.V. M. Rhenviensis (p. 734) there is this entry: 'Missale antiquissimum Saec. viii. Hoc Missale ab aliquo Scoto scriptum S. Fintanus noster, ex Scotia oriundus, forsan vel ipsemet scripsit, vel scriptum secum in monasterium nostrum Rhenviense attulit' (Pertz, Archiv der Gesellschaft für ältere deutsche Geschichtskunde, vii. 182). No trace of this Missal can be found, and the notice is now believed to be due to some mistake on the part of the compiler of the Catalogue (Keller, ut supr., p. 94). Professor Westwood has searched for such a volume in vain at Rheinau, Zurich, Karlsruhe, &c.

¹ Letters and words in brackets have been supplied conjecturally. The original rubrics are written continuously with, and in the same handwriting as, the rest of the text. Contracted and abbreviated words have been written at length. Al, all, alle are the various abbreviations used for alleluia here and in other Irish fragments.

§ 11.—IRISH FRAGMENTS. BASLE MS. A. vii. 3.

Among the MSS. in the Library at Basle, there is a ninth-century Greek Psalter with an interlinear Latin version, No. A. vii. 3¹. The first three leaves are occupied by some liturgical fragments, in a later Irish handwriting, consisting of two Hymns, (a) in honour of St. Mary the Virgin, (b) of St. Bridget²; two prayers addressed (a) to St. Mary, (b) to all Angels and Saints, and the following prayer for use before the altar:—

DE CONSCIËNTIÆ REATU ANTE ALTARE.

(Fol. 2 b) Domine, deus omnipotens, ego humiliter te adoro. Tu es rex regum, et dominus dominantium. Tu es arbiter omnis saeculi. Tu es redemptor animarum. Tu es liberator credentium. Tu es spes laborantium. Tu es paraclitus dolentium. Tu es uia errantium. Tu es magister gentium. Tu es creator omnium. Tu es amator omnis boni. Tu es princeps omnium uirtutum. Tu es amator uirginum. Tu es fons sapientium. Tu es fides credentium. Tu es lux lucis. Tu es fons sanctitatis. Tu es gloria dei patris in excelsis. Tu sedes ad dextram dei patris, in alto throno regnans in saecula. Ego te peto ut des mihi remissionem omnium peccatorum meorum, deus meus, ihesu christe. Tu es qui neminem uis perire, sed omnes uis saluos fieri, et ad agnitionem ueritatis uenire. Tu es qui ore tuo sancto et casto dixisti, In quacunque die conuersus fuerit peccator, uita uiuet et non morietur. Ego reuertor ad te, et in toto corde meo clamabo at te, domine deus meus. Delictum meum cognitum tibi facio, et iniustitiam meam non abscondo. Tibi humiliter confiteor, domine deus meus, quia peccaui in celum et in terram coram te, et coram angelis tuis sanctis, et coram facie omnium sanctorum, tam per negligentiam mandatorum tuorum, et q[uam] malefactorum meorum. Ego corde, ego

§ 12.—IRISH FRAGMENTS. ANTIPHONARY OF BANGOR.

This relic of the ancient Church of Ireland² contains chiefly hymns and other portions of the day and night Hours, but it includes the following passages, the liturgical use and connection of which are evident or probable.

i. YMNUM QUANDO COMMONICARENT SACERDOTES.

Sancti venite³, christi corpus sumite; sanctum bibentes quo redempti sanguine.

¹ This long prayer, though not found verbatim elsewhere, resembles in substance the private devotions for the priest frequently introduced into early Missals under the title of 'Apologia Sacerdotis' or 'Confessio Peccatoris.' Other examples, resembling the text in the enumeration of the parts of the human body by which sin has been committed, or in the multiplication of clauses commencing with the word 'Peccaui,' will be found in a 'Praeparatio ad Missam,' published by Gerbertus ex Cod. S. Blasian. saec. x (Lit. Aleman. i. 351); in the 'Missa Flacii Illyrici,' published by Martene (ordo iv. pp. 176-9); and in a tenth-century Tours Sacramentary (ordo vii. ib. p. 193).

Haec omnia credo in Deum. Amen¹.

ORATIO DIURNA. Pater noster, &c.

iv. BENEDICTIO PUERORUM¹.

Benedicite omnia opera domini, dominum; ymnum dicite, et superexaltate eum in saecula, &c.

COLLECTIO POST BENEDITIONEM PUERORUM.

Exaudi praeces nostras, omnipotens deus, et praesta ut sicut indecantato Imno beata puerorum instituta sectamur, Ita pro tuo munere peccatorum laqueys absoluti aeterni ignis non ambiamur incendiis, saluator mundi, qui cum patre uiuis².

SUPER BENEDITIONEM TRIUM PUERORUM.

Sancte Domine, et gloriosae mirabilium uertutum effector, qui tribus pueris inter supplicia constitutis quartus adsistis, cui factum facilius est ignium temperare naturam, et uim quodammodo exusstantium coercere flammaram, ut inter incendia frigida ymnum tibi canentes cum magna uictoria exultarent, eandem nunc, domine, ad liberandos ac protegendos nos dona uirtutem, saluator mundi³.

POST BENEDITIONEM TRIUM PUERORUM.

Deus, qui pueris fide feruentibus fornacis flammam frigidam facis, et tribus inuictis, morte diuicta, quartus adsistes, praecamur nobis aestibus carnis talem uirtutem praestes adustus per te, Ihesu Christe⁴.

POST YMNUM TRIUM PUERORUM.

Te enim, omnipotens deus, benedicimus iure, qui tres pueros liberasti ab igne nos quoque de supplicio mortis aeternae propter misericordiam tuam eripe, qui regnas¹.

POST BENEDICITE.

Ut tres pueros in flamma saluasti discensu in fornacem caelestis nuntii, sic nos per angelum magni consilii liberare digneris ab igne inferni, qui regnas².

SUPER BENEDICTIONEM TRIUM PUERORUM.

Tres ebrei venerabiles numero, sacramento muniti, aetate teneri, sed fidei soliditate robusti, amore diuinae relegionis regis adorare imaginem contempserunt, utpute qui ipsum contempserant regem, qui ira sufflatus solito septies amplius caminum iusit incendi, ac pice et stuppa armatum citari in cendium aestuantibus globis. Erubescit quoque ipsum alienis ignibus coelum. Illo praecipitantur insontes, ibidemque te, propter quem praecipitantur inueniunt, Christe. Taliter nos ex tyranni intellectualis furore, et ab ingenito igni digneris liberare, saluator mundi, qui cum aeterno patre uiuis³.

INCIPIUNT ANTEFANI SUPER CANTEMUS EI BENEDICITE.

Tres pueri in camino missi sunt, et non timuerunt flammam ignis, dixerunt laudem domino nostro.

Tres pueri te orabant de medio ignis, ad te clamabant ex una uoce, ymnum dicebant.

§ 13. IRISH FRAGMENTS. BOOK OF HYMNS.

The MS. known as the 'Liber Hymnorum,' or Book of Hymns, now in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin (E. 4. 2), is a collection of Hymns, Canticles, and Collects once used in the Irish Church. It has been assigned to the ninth or tenth century, but its heavy even angular writing and the mediaeval character of some of its contents point to a date two or three centuries later. About one-half of it (fol. 1 a-15 a) has been published by the Irish Archæological and Celtic Society, under the careful and competent editorship of Dr. J. H. Todd (vol. xvii). It is to be regretted that the work has never been completed. Among the devotions on the unpublished pages (ff. 20 b-34 b) are a lengthy 'Lamentatio Ambrosii episcopi Mediolaniae' (f. 20 a), to the recitation of which special virtue was attached, and a collection of 'ecclxii orationes quas beatus papa gregorius sparsim de toto psalterio, deo gubernante et adiuuante congregavit. Si deuota mente cantentur, uicem, ut fertur, omnium psalmodum, et sacrificii, et fidelis animarum commendationis continent.' But, although indulged with a sacrificial efficacy, neither these nor any of the devotions in the volume have a necessary eucharistic connection. It must therefore suffice here to exhibit a few sample forms of collects &c. which, at the most, are not necessarily non-eucharistic in their association.

Prayer of St. Mugint, tutor of St. Finnian, in the earlier part of the sixth century :—

Fol. 4 b. 'Deprecamur te, domine, in omni misericordia tua ut auferatur furor tuus et ira tua a ciuitate ista et de domu sancta tua. Quoniam Peccauius, Peccauius tibi, domine, et tu iratus es nobis, et non est qui effugiat manum tuam. Sed supplicemus ut ueniat super nos misericordia tua, domine, qui in ninuen pepercisti inuocantes dominum. Exclamemus ut respicias populum tuum conculcatum et dolentem, et protegas templum sanctum tuum ne ab impiis contaminetur, et miserearis nimis afflictę ciuitati tuę. Exclamamus omnes ad dominum dicentes.

'Peccauius tibi, Domine, peccauius, patientiam habe in nobis, et erue nos a malis que quotidie crescunt super nos. Dimitte, domine, peccato populi tui secundum multitudinem misericordię tuę.

'Propitius fuisti patribus nostris, propitius esto nobis, et implebitur gloria tua in uniuersa tua². Recordare, domine, dic angelo tuo percutienti populum tuum, Sufficit³, contene manum tuam, et cesset interfectio que grassatur in populo ut non perdas animam uiuentem.

'Exurge, domine, adiuua nos et redime nos propter n[omen] t[uum].'

To which is appended in a different handwriting:—

'Parce domine peccantibus, ignosce penitentibus, misere nobis te rogantibus, saluator omnium christe, respice in nos ihesu et miserere. Amen⁴.'

⁴ These collects were evidently written for the use of some city or monastery (civitas) in the time of an epidemic or of a hostile invasion. Their language is inconsistent with the curious Irish legend of their origin as given in the Vernacular Preface, f. 4 a, translated in Lib. Hym. p. 97. version (Bunsen, Analecta Ante-Nicaena, iii. 86), occurs again, in its liturgical position, in the Stowe Missal, p. 227. It is here followed by six antiphons from the Psalms, which indicate that it was used in the night Offices of the early Irish Church. The rubric preceding it in the Antiphon. Benchor. directs its use ‘at vespers and matins;’ p. 193.

THE STOWE MISSAL.

Little is known about the history of the MS. which bears this name, and which is the earliest surviving Missal of the Irish Church¹.

The inscriptions on its cumhdach, a metal-work cover of eleventh-century workmanship, indicate that it originally belonged to some church in Munster, that church being possibly the monastery founded by St. Ruadhan at Lothra in the barony of Lower Ormond and County of Tipperary, where he died as its first abbot and patron² A.D. 584. The monastic character of the service book is also evidenced by the insertion of the words 'et abbate nostro' in the clause of the canon 'Te igitur' &c. (p. 234) and by the long lists of monastic Irish saints enumerated on pp. 238, 240. Possibly the presence of two collects, headed 'Oratio in sollemnitatibus Petri et Christi' (p. 227) and 'Oratio prima Petri' (p. 228), may point to the monastery having been dedicated to St. Peter. At an early date, probably in the twelfth century, it left Ireland, perhaps transferred to the Continent by some of those Irishmen who carried donations from Tordelbach O'Brian, king of Munster, to the monastery of Ratisbon A.D. 1130. It was discovered abroad in the eighteenth century by John Grace, Esq., of Nenagh in Ireland, an officer in the German service, who died without leaving any memorandum respecting the monastery or library where it was found. From his hands it passed into those of the Duke of Buckingham, where it remained until the sale of the Stowe Library (1849), when it was bought by the Earl of Ashburnham, in whose library at Ashburnham Place it is now preserved.

¹ Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, vol. xxiii. ad finem. See also O'Connor's Rerum Hibernicarum Scriptores, vol. ii. ad finem, and Bibliotheca MS. Stowensis, vol. i. App. Dr. O'Connor's description is full of inaccuracies. The absence of any allusion to the mixed chalice is accounted for because that ceremony is only of human institution (p. 46). Natalis Calicis is translated 'Lent' (p. 47). The antiquity of the Creed is deduced from the absence of the article of 'The descent into hell' (p. 45), as if that clause had ever formed part of the Nicene Creed. The contraction 'scōrum' for sanctorum is lengthened into 'Scotorum' (p. 48). The musical notes, of which he gives a long description (p. 43), are the creation of his own imagination, and do not exist in the original MS.

² Hardly anything is known about St. Ruadhan. He is included in the list of Saints on p. 238, but the name is written without any change in the size of letters, or exceptional ornamentation. His life is published by the Bollandists (Acta SS. Ap. 15, p. 382), from a twelfth-century MS., a long tissue of such ludicrous and improbable miracles that the compilers confess in their Preface to having suppressed part of it, for fear of exciting ridicule. His abbey at Lothra was destroyed by the Danes A.D. 843 (Annal. IV. Magistr. sub anno), when this volume, if written before that date, must have been saved.

The present contents of the volume are arranged as follows:—

Fol. 1 a–12 b. St. John's Gospel, written at a very early date by a scribe who at its conclusion appends his name in Ogham characters.

Fol. 13 a–37 a. Ordinary and Canon of the Mass, with the colophon 'moel caich scripsit.'

Fol. 37 a–40 b. Misa apostolorum, et martirum, et sanctorum, et sanctorum uirginum.

Fol. 40 b–43 b. Misa pro penitentibus uiuis.

Fol. 43 b–45 a. Misa pro mortuis pluribus.

Fol. 45 b–64 a. Ordo baptismi.

Fol. 64 b–66 b. An old-Irish treatise on the Eucharist, followed by three old-Irish charms.

The Sacramental portion of the volume, with which alone we are here concerned, is in various handwritings, the oldest of which cannot, on liturgical grounds, be assigned to an earlier period than the ninth century, though several of the features enumerated on pp. 201–203, taken singly, seem to point to a still earlier, and others to a still later date.

Palæographical evidence does not appear to be inconsistent with such a conclusion so far as it has been possible to compare the text of the Stowe Missal with such Irish or Hiberno-Latin MSS. as have been found accessible either in the original, or in the facsimiles presented in the pages of the National MSS. of Ireland, and the publications of the Palæographical Society.

The following facts make it impossible to accept Dr. Todd's hasty assignation of the earlier portion of the Missal to the sixth century¹, and in part suggest a date not earlier than the ninth century:—

(a) The use and position of the Nicene Creed; p. 236. n. 35.

(b) The presence of the Agnus Dei; p. 266. n. 156.

(c) The structural completeness of the Ordinarium Missae.

(d) The presence of the words 'diesque nostros in tua pace disponas, atque ab aeterna damnatione nos eripias, et in electorum tuorum jubeas grege numerari' (p. 236), which are known to have been added to the Canon by Gregory the Great (590–604)², and which prove that we have not here a pure Gelasian text (p. 232):

(e) The date of several of the saints who are commemorated in the list commencing on f. 31 a, including Laurence, Mellitus, and Justus, Archbishops of Canterbury, the latter of whom died in A. D. 627; p. 263. n. 113. The list of saints on fol. 29 is written in the later hand on an interpolated leaf, and need not here be taken into account.

The following parts of the Missal are written in the older and larger handwriting, of which a sample is presented in the frontispiece:—f. 13 a, from the first Peccavimus; f. 13 b; f. 14 a, from 'Rogo . . ad finem;' f. 14 b, 'ascendat . . rex caelestis;' f. 15 a, except the collect 'Deus qui diligentibus,' &c.; f. 15 b, except the collect 'Deus qui nos,' &c.; ff. 16 a, b, 17 a; f. 17 b, to 'acceptos per dominum;' f. 19 a, b; f. 20 a, to 'emunda per dominum;’ f. 25 b, from ‘Et memoriam;’ f. 26 a, b; f. 27 a, except from ‘in mei memoriam;’ f. 27 b, from ‘unde et memores;’ f. 28 a b; ff. 31 a b, 32 a b, 33 a; f. 33 b, to ‘peccatorum nostrorum;’ ff. 36 b–45 a; ff. 46 a–64 a.

Of the above, f. 28 a b, ff. 31 a–33 b, ff. 57 a–64 a are written in a darker ink and a more cursive and flourishing handwriting than the rest, which seems to denote a change of scribe but not any material change of date. A similar change of style is noticeable in other Celtic MSS., as in the Book of Kells (Palæogr. Soc. Publications, Plate 88, last line), the Codex S. Dunstani (Bodl. Lib. Auct. F. iv. 32, f. 46 b), and the diamond-shaped centre on f. 103 a in the Book of Armagh, and especially in the ‘Argumentum pilagii in aepistulam ad Romanos’ on f. 107 b of that MS.

The excepted pages and portions of pages in the above list¹ are written in a smaller and later minuscule hand (that of Moel Caich, f. 36 a), depending from single ruled lines, the older text having been in some places erased to make way for it. The headings of Missæ and Collects, all the Irish and Latin Rubrics, are in various and later handwritings, except the Rubrics in the Ordo Baptismi, which are coæval with the text.

The collects ‘Deus qui nos,’ &c. on f. 15 b, and ‘Quaesumus Domine’ on f. 18 b, have been added at a still later period.

In spite of these variations of handwriting there seems little reason to doubt that the whole Ordo Missæ, as it now stands, was in use in some Church in Ireland in the tenth, and the older portion of it perhaps in the ninth century.

Though written in Ireland and by Irish scribes, it contains petitions ‘pro piissimis imperatoribus et omni Romano exercitu’ (p. 229), ‘pro imperio Romano’ (p. 235), and the heading 'Orationes et Preces Ecclesiae Romanae' (p. 228). The canon is headed, 'Canon dominicus papae Gilasi' (p. 234). Internal evidence of the truthfulness of this description is borne out by an examination of the text, and by the presence of such distinctly Gelasian peculiarities as the omission of the words 'Deum de Deo' from the Creed, and of the clauses 'Dominus vobiscum,' 'Et cum spiritu tuo' before the Sursum corda. The interest of the MS. partly lies in its containing one of the earliest known copies of the Gelasian text, partly in its being interspersed with fragments of an ancient Celtic Liturgy which have either not been preserved elsewhere, or have been only recently discovered in the pages of other early Irish MSS. printed in this chapter.

Among its many liturgical peculiarities and indications of an early date, the following seem to deserve special and separate mention :—

1. The Litany at the commencement of the Ordo Missæ (p. 226).

2. The unique position of another ancient Missal Litany, entitled 'Deprecatio Sancti Martini,' between the Epistle and the Gospel (p. 229).

3. The presence of vernacular rubrics (pp. 210, 216, 230, 232, 233, 234, 241).

4. The long lists of early saints, chiefly Irish, inserted in the text of the canon.

5. The absence of any special 'Proprium Sanctorum,' and the simple provision of a single Missa Commnis Sanctorum (p. 244) for all commemorations of saints, which, together with a single Mass for Penitents (p. 246) and another for the Dead (p. 247), make up the smallest known volume which ever passed under the title of a Missal.

6. The absence of the 'Filioque' from the Nicene Creed (p. 232. See frontispiece).

7. The fixed use of an unchanging Epistle and Gospel (pp. 228, 231).

8. The interpolation of various forms of private devotion for the priest in the shape of an Apologia or Confessio Sacerdotis (pp. 226, 227, 230, 239).

9. The enumeration of only three orders, Bishops, Priests, and Deacons, all notice of the minor orders being omitted (pp. 229, 233, 235).

10. The general paucity of rubrics, together with the absence of any allusion to the mixed chalice or to the use of incense, &c.

11. The absence from the text of the canon of the tenth-century additional clause, 'pro quibus tibi offerimus vel' (p. 234).

12. The paucity of crosses, only five being marked for use as against thirty-one in the present Roman Canon, and none occurring at the words of institution.

13. The presence of early and rare liturgical terms, e.g. senior, augmentum, stella, kalendae, natalis calicis, quinquagensima, sacrificium spirituale, anatheticus gradus, liber vitae.

14. Singular usages, e.g. the position of the fraction of the Host before the Pater Noster (p. 244), the crossing of the child's hand and the washing of the feet in Baptism (pp. 217-8).

15. The petition that the founder of the church and all the people may be converted from idolatry (p. 236).

There is a general resemblance in this Irish Mass to the ninth- or tenth-century Ordo Missae which was first published by M. Flacius Illyricus A.D. 1557 under the title of 'Missa Latina quae olim ante Romanam in usu fuit,' and which was afterwards printed by Martene¹. Certain prayers and phrases (p. 249, notes 3, 7, 28, 46) are common to both, but there the resemblance ends. The text, especially in the 'Gloria in Excelsis' and the 'Nicene Creed,' is very dissimilar, and there is no ground for supposing that there can be any original connection, or anything more than an accidental resemblance, between the two.

The Stowe Missal affords no certain proof, but throws some light on the question as to what was the earliest form of Liturgy in use in the Hiberno-Celtic Church. It proves that the Roman Canon was introduced into at least partial use in Ireland as early as the ninth century, while it retains certain portions of an earlier and a different Liturgy interwoven with it. The admixture of passages from the Ambrosian, Gallican, and Mozarabic rites with the Roman Canon is suggestive of a period when the diversity had not ceased to exist which is alluded to in Tirechan's sketch of the ancient Irish Church, when Irish saints 'diversas regulas et missas habebant, et diversam tonsuram¹.'

The following 'Ordo Baptismi,' where it agrees with the Roman rite, follows the text of the Gelasian Sacramentary, but it does not altogether resemble the Gelasian or any other extant Ordo Baptismi, and is remarkable partly for its great length, partly for the differences which it exhibits both in text and ritual from every other known rite. It is important and interesting as presenting a hitherto unpublished MS. text of the earliest surviving Baptismal Office known to have been used in any part of the Church of these islands.

It consists of four clearly marked divisions:—

I. Ordo ad Catechumenum faciendum.

II. Consecratio Fontis.

III. Ordo Baptismi.

IV. Ordo Communions nuper Baptizatorum.

I. The ordinary rites in use at the admission of catechumens, and which were repeated at the seven 'scrutinia catechumenorum' held during Lent, with however great local variety of usage², were:—

² Mart. lib. i. cap. i. art. vi. i.

1. The sign of the cross upon the forehead.
2. The imposition of hands with prayer.
3. Exorcism.
4. Insufflation (Exsufflatio).
5. Touching the nose and ears with saliva.
6. Unction of the breast and shoulders.

Of these rites, 3, 4, and 6 are found in the Stowe Rite, while there is no mention of 1, 2, and 5¹.

In addition to these points, there is here the blessing of salt, and its imposition in the mouth of the catechumen, (as in the Gelasian Sacramentary², and in the present Roman Ordines Baptismi, though with a different arrangement of words, p. 210), and a twofold application of the threefold questions of renunciation, separated by the threefold questions as to the candidate's faith (p. 209), an arrangement which does not appear to be found elsewhere.

II. The Benedictio or Consecratio Fontis opens with verses drawn from Psalms xli, xxviii, whereas the present Roman tract and verses sung during the procession to the font are drawn from the former Psalm only (xli. 1, 2, 3). Then follows the lengthy Roman form of consecration substantially as found in the Gelasian Sacramentary, and as laid down for use in the present Roman Missal on Easter Eve. An older and shorter Benedictio aquae, consisting of two collects drawn, one from a Petrine, the other from an Ephesine source, are curiously placed, as if by way of appendix, at the conclusion of the Baptismal Office (Benedic Domine, &c. fol. 58 b, Exorcizo te spiritus immunde, &c. fol. 59 a).

III. The rite of baptism, differing both in language and ritual from any extant Ordo Baptismi, and especially remarkable for the presence of the 'Pedilavium' and the ceremonial crossing of the right hand of the candidate, and for the omission of the verbal formula of Baptism and of the presentation of the lighted taper (pp. 216, 217).

IV. The Communion of the newly-baptized in both kinds conjointly, with thanksgiving collect and antiphons (p. 218).

Then follow various short offices:—

1. Ad Visitandum Infirmum (p. 220).
2. De Sacramento Extremae Unctionis (p. 223).
3. Ad Communicandum Infirmum (Ib.)

It is hardly consistent with technical accuracy to print this 'Ordo Baptismi' under the heading of 'Reliquiae Liturgicae,' but a Eucharistic character is given to it by its retention of the custom, now obsolete in Western Christendom, of the immediate communion of the newly-baptized, and by there being appended to it offices for the Visitation, Unction, and Communion of the Sick, bearing a close resemblance, both verbal and substantial, to the similar Celtic offices surviving in the Books of Deer, Dimma, and Mulling.

⁷ Anglice, 'Here the unction is made.'

² This response does not seem to occur elsewhere.

⁴ This ceremonial washing of the feet, or 'pedilavium,' is not found in any Roman Office, but is common to the early Gallican 'Ordines Baptismi,' and was still in use in France in the eighth century, as we gather from a work, which usually passes under the name of St. Ambrose, and is bound up with his writings, but is now ascertained to be a Gallican production of about A.D. 800, 'Ascendisti de fonte? Quid secutum est? Audisti lectionem. Succinctus summus sacerdos pedes tibi lavit. . . Non ignoramus quod Ecclesia Romana hanc consuetudinem non habeat.' (Ambros. De Sacram. lib. iii. cap. i, and Gallican Liturgies, ed. by G. H. Forbes, pp. 97, 189, 267.) Its presence in this ancient Irish Missal possibly supplies the clue to the meaning of one of the conditions of union offered, but without success, by St. Augustine to the British bishops, the precise interpretation of which has been hitherto left to conjecture:—‘Ut ministerium baptizandi, quo Deo renascimur, juxta morem sanctae Romanae et Apostolicae Ecclesiae compleatis.’ (Bede, H. E. ii. 2; H. and S. i. 153.) This passage has by some been supposed to refer to confirmation. Dr. Lingard states, without giving any authority, that the Britons did not confirm after baptism. (A. S. Church, i. 295.) This rite of pedilavium obtained also at one time in Spain, but was abolished by Can. 48 of the Council of Eliberis, A.D. 305. (Mansi, Concil. tom. ii. p. 14).

¹⁰ [Communion of the newly-baptized.] The immediate approach to the altar of the newly-baptized, still clad in their white dress, ‘familia candidata,’ is described at length in the Gallican work usually printed as S. Ambros. de Sacram. lib. iii. 2. § 15; iv. 2; v. 3. § 14. The confirmation or communion (generally both) of such persons is ordered in every mediaeval Ritual till the fourteenth century. The rubric in the Gelasian Ordo Bapt. (Murat. ed. p. 571) simply prescribes, ‘Deinde ab episcopo datur eis Spiritus septiformis.’ In the ninth-century Gelasian Codices (Colbert. 1348, Reg. 3866) there is this order:— 'Postea si fuerit oblata, agenda est missa, et communicat. Sin autem, dabis, eis tantum sacramenta Corporis et Sanguinis Christi dicens, Corpus Domini nostri Jesu Christi sit tibi in vitam aeternam;' followed by two short collects of thanksgiving for baptism. (Mart. i. p. 66.)

For this purpose altars were usually erected in baptisteries, a custom which can be traced back to the time of Pope Hilary (461-7). (Mart. vol. i. pp. 5, 55.)

In a tenth-century Parisian Codex this rubric occurs: 'Et vestitur infans vestimentis suis. Si vero episcopus adest statim confirmari eum oportet chrismate et postea communicare; Et si episcopus deest, communicetur a presbytero dicente ita,' &c. (Mart. Ordo x. vol. i. p. 70.) ² p. 167. n. 3. There are one or two post-baptismal collects of thanksgiving resembling this one in their tenor in all the Gallican Offices. Compare the following from the Sacram. Gallican. (Mab. edit. p. 325): 'Laudes et gratias Domino referamus, fratres dilectissimi, quod augere dignatus est ecclesiae suae congregationem per caros nostros qui modo baptizati sunt. Petamus ergo de Domini misericordia ut baptismum sanctum quod acceperunt, inlibatum, inuolatum, et immaculatum perferant ante tribunal Christi.'

² This very nearly resembles the formula of Uction in the Book of Dimma, p. 169; Book of Mulling, p. 172.

NOTES.

1. This title, together with the following Versicle, 'Letania—intende,' is written on the top margin of fol. 13 a. Compare the wording of the title on p. 244.

2. This is the second Versicle at Matins, and the Introit for Dom. xii. Pentec. (S. R.).

3. The same Litany occurs in the St. Gall fragment, MS. No. 1395, p. 179, and seems to be peculiarly Irish. A short Litany of this kind used always to precede Mass, intervening between it and the preceding office of Terce or Sext. Its use in the Cluniac constitutions was thus prescribed: 'Majorem missam in privatis diebus solet iterum letania prævenire, quæ tamen non est multum proluxa, tribus tantum Sanctis de singulis ordinibus nominandis.' Udalricus, Antiq. Consuet. Cluniacens. lib. i. c. 6.

The opening rubric of the Mass edited by Mat. Flac. Illyricus (Mart. i. p. 176) runs thus: 'In primis quomodo sacerdos Apologetica celebrare debeat, antequam ad missarum celebrationem accedat. Mox antequam sacerdotalibus induatur vestibus, si locus acciderit, vel tempus permiserit, flexis genibus coram altare cantet vii. Psalmos poenitentiales cum litanis, qua finita dicat "Pater Noster," Credo in Deum Patrem omnipotentem. Post has preces.' Among these preces the following bear resemblance, partly verbal, partly substantial, to the opening devotions of the Stowe Missal:—

'Peccavimus cum patribus nostris, injuste egimus, iniquitatem fecimus Domine.'

'Extende, Domine, brachium tuum; et libera animas nostras ne pereamus.'

'Domine exaudi orationem meam.'

The triple Kyrie eleison is the sole surviving relic in the present Roman Ordinary of the Mass of an older Litany; De Vert, Cérémonies de l'Eglise, i. 67.

4. St. Madius occupies the same position in the list of saints within the Canon (p. 240), and in the Litany in the St. Gall fragment, No. 1395, p. 180. See note 91.

5. The preparatory absolution in a Tours Missal, A.D. 1533, is given: '... per auxilium et signum sanctæ crucis ... et per intercessionem ... et omnium Sanctorum et Sanctarum' (Mart. i. p. 130).

6. The words which follow are the usual conclusion of the prayer of St. Ambrose; see p. 239. n. (89). Possibly the scribe intended to insert the 'Prayer of St. Augustine' given at the commencement of the Sarum Ordinary of the Mass under this title (p. 566), and printed at the commencement of the Roman Missal under the title of Oratio Sancti Ambrosii Episcopi (p. lxii). The Roman rubric directs it to be said 'Pro opportunitate sacerdotis ante celebrationem et communionem.' The rubric in a Sarum Missal given by a Lord Prior of Worcester to the church of Bromsgrove, A.D. 1511, runs thus: 'Oratio Sancti Augustini dicenda a sacerdote in Missa dum canitur Officium et Kyrie et Gloria in Excelsis et Credo in unum; vel tota dicitur ante missam quod melius est.

7. This prayer occurs in a ninth-century Troyes Pontifical, at vesting, 'ad tunicam' (Mart. ordo vi. p. 191); in a ninth-century Tours Missal among the apologiae after vesting (ib. ordo vii. p. 193); in a Rheims Pontifical, undated (ib. ordo ix. p. 195); in a tenth-century Corbie Sacramentary, 'ad baltheum' (ib. ordo xi. p. 203); in the Missa 'Flacii Illyrici postquam sacerdos infulatus fuerit' (ib. ordo iv. p. 177); in the Codex Chisli in the Preparatio sacerdotis ad Missam, after vesting (ib. ordo xii. p. 205); in the Ambrosian rite, as the 'Oratio secreta antequam sacerdos accedat altare' (Pamel. Liturg. i. 293). The presence and position of this and similar prayers for the personal use of the priest are in themselves a proof of the antiquity of any Missal.

8. A later hand had added 'I' over 'batheo'; 'neque permittas' over 'perire'; 'praesta' before 'per dominum'; and seems to suggest the abbreviation of the collect by the omission of the words from 'ut—pacificas.'

9. The scribe must have been an ardent devotee of St. Peter to write down Petri et Christi instead of Christi et Petri; or is Christi a clerical error for Pauli?

10. Compare the language of the Absolution in the Reconciliatio poenitentiam on Maundy Thursday: 'Absolvimus vos vice beati Petri, apostolorum principis cui collata est a Domino potestas ligandi atque solvendi,' &c. Sar. Mis. p. 300; Corpus Mis. p. 210. The words 'Deus—tradidisti' are the opening words of the collect 'in Com. S. Petri Ap.' on June 30 in the Rom. Mis. p. 438, Sar. Mis. p. 790. In a Syrian collect of Absolution quoted by Mart., ordo xxiii. vol. i. p. 335, the words 'ceterisque discipulis suis' have been significantly added after 'beato Petri'; also in a fourteenth-century Rouen Rit., ordo xii. Mart. vol. ii. p. 402.

11. This is the Roman collect, with verbal variations, in Cathedra S. Petri, Jan. 18, 25, Feb. 22, and the memorial collect of St. Peter on June 30. Its earliest occurrence is in the Gelas. Sacram. lib. ii. ordo xxx. It also occurs in the Missale Vesontionense under the heading of 'Missa Romensis Cottidiana,' p. 206.

12. The 'Gloria in Excelsis' was introduced into the Roman Liturgy by Pope Symmachus, 498–514 (Wal. Strabo, De Rebus Eccles. c. 22). Several variations from the received Western text will be observed here. Compare the text in the Ant. Bench. p. 193; Book of Hymns, p. 197. It forms no part of the Eastern nor of the ancient Gallican Liturgy, judging from the omission of any reference to it in Germanus's Expos. Brev. Antiq. Lit. Gallican. (Mart. i. p. 167). It is noteworthy however that in the Sacramentarium Gallicanum it occurs as in the Anglican Liturgy, in the position of a thanksgiving after the Communion (Mabillon, Mus. It. i. p. 281).

13. This collect is assigned to Dom. v. Pentec. (R.), Dom. vi. post Trin. (S.), Gelas. Sacr. iii. coll. i; Greg. Sacr. Hebd. vi. post Pentec.

14. There are frequent allusions in later Missals to the 'Romanus Ordo' or 'Ecclesia Romana' (York Missal, i. pp. 168, 169), as differing from the local or national use; or to the latter as differing from the former (Sarum Missal, pp. 6, 15). In the case of the York Missal such expressions have been taken to date from the time of Charlemagne, when the Ordo Romanus was introduced into France by royal authority, and probably into York by Alcuin or his pupil Archbishop Eanbald II. In the present text a contrast seems to be implied between the devotions of the foreign Church of Rome and those of the ancient national Church of Ireland.

15-15. Deus—placaris. These are the opening words in the Greg. Sacram. for the Feria v. in Quinquagesima, but the rest of the collect is different. The present collect occurs nearly in this position in the Sacramentarium Gallicanum (Mabillon, Mus. It. i. p. 279).

16. This is a rare word of sacrificial signification used by Arnobius, Adv. Gentes, lib. vii. c. 24, and defined by Varro as 'quod ex immolata hostia dejectum in jecore in porriciendo augendi causa;' De Lingua Lat. lib. v. § 112. p. 44, edit. 1833. I have not met with its use elsewhere as a term of Christian ritual. It may refer to some unwritten addition made at this point of the service, or can it refer merely to the concluding unwritten words of the collect 'Jesum Christum,' &c.? Compare the rubric on p. 233. The word 'augmentum' occurs in cap. 7 of the Regula S. Columbani quoted on p. 97.

17. 1 Cor. xi. 26-32. This is a portion of the Epistle assigned to Coena Domini in the Roman and Sarum Missals (1 Cor. xi. 20-32), in the Sacram. Gallican. (1 Cor. xi. 20-26). The presence here of single fixed lessons is remarkable, and an evidence of great antiquity. The only other case where the same Epistle and Gospel are conjectured to have been always used is that of the Liturgy of the Church of Malabar; Le Brun, Explication de la Messe, tom. vi. p. 487. The suitability of the passages of Scripture selected here for constant use, both of them bearing on the institution of the Eucharist, is obvious.

18. This collect is written on the lower margin of fol. 15 b, in the later hand.

18 a. Ps. civ. 4.

18 b. 1 Par. xvi. 8-10.

19. These are the opening words (Grata—quibus) of a Secret in the Corpus Missal, p. 190, and in the Gelasian Sacram. p. 682.

20. Ps. cxvii. 14. V. Laus, Bk. of Dimma, p. 170, Stowe Missal, p. 225.

21. This only differs slightly from the Roman Secret for Dom. iv. Adv.: 'Sacrificiis praesentibus quaesumus, Domine, placatus intende: ut et devotioni nostrae proficiant et saluti.' Sacram. Leon. p. 482; Gelas. p. 682; Greg. pp. 29, 43, 105, 108, 124, 138.

22. It is curious to find this word lingering as the title of mediaeval devotions of the same character. The York Bidding Prayers, A.D. 1405, commence thus: 'Deprecemur Deum Patrem Omnipotentem pro pace et stabilitate sanctae matris Ecclesiae' (Early Eng. Text Soc. vol. 71. p. 64). Another form of Bidding Prayers (A.D. 1440-50) is headed 'Deprecatio pro pace Ecclesiae et regni in diebus dominicis' (ib. p. 68). For another use of the word 'deprecatio,' see p. 106. The association of these prayers with the name of St. Martin, Bishop of Tours (371-401), indicates that, though of Eastern origin, they reached Ireland through a Gallican channel.

That such a Litany existed in the ancient Gallican rite is proved by the allusions of various writers. Caesarius of Arles speaks of the 'Oratio (quae) Diacono clamante indicitur' (Serm. cclxxvi. in App. ad Opp. S. Aug., Migne, Bib. Pat. Lat. xxxix. 2285). Germanus Parisiensis devotes a paragraph to its description under the name of 'Prex,' and indicates its position after the homily and before the expulsion of the catechumens (Mart. i. p. 167). No traces of the wording of this 'Prex' exist in any extant Gallican Missal, except that the Mozarabic Litany for Passion Sunday occurs in the Sacramentarium Gallicanum for Easter Eve (Mus. Ital. i. 317; Mis. Moz. p. 372); and the expression 'Collectio post precem,' which is the title of a prayer in the Missale Gothicum on Christmas Day and Easter Day, possibly refers to a preceding Litany, although Mabillon gives a different interpretation of it (Lit. Gallic. p. 190).

It is noteworthy that the character of these intercessions corresponds to those enumerated, in a somewhat different order, in a passage in the Regula S. Columbani: 'Cum versiculorum augmento intervenientium pro peccatis primum nostris, deinde pro omni populo Christiano, deinde pro sacerdotibus, et reliquis Deo consecratis sacrae plebis gradibus, postremo pro elemosynas facientibus, postea pro pace regum, novissime pro inimicis, ne illis Deus statuatur in peccatum quod persequuntur nos, et detrahunt nobis, quia nesciunt quod faciunt.'

23. Similar passages are found in the Rogation Litany printed from a tenth-century Pontifical of the diocese of Münster in Westphalia (Mart. lib. iv. c. 27. p. 185). Compare the 'Orationes Sollemnes' after the Gospel on Good Friday and the Litany before Mass on Easter Eve in the present Roman Missal; the petitions after the Ingressa on four Sundays in Lent in the Milanese rite; after the Psallendo and before the Epistle on the first five Sundays in Lent in the Mozarabic rite; in the Liturgies of St. Chrysostom and St. Basil before the Introit; in the Liturgies of Armenia and Malabar before the first lection. The present position between the Epistle and the Gospel appears to be unique. There is also a strong resemblance to the 'Bidding Prayers,' or Preces Dominicales, which immediately preceded the sermon in the mediæval English Church, and were said in the Procession before Mass in cathedral and collegiate churches, but after the Gospel and Offertory in parish churches. Compare the tenth-century form in use at York, printed in Early English Text Society, vol. 71. p. 62, with Mr. Simmons' exhaustive note, ib. p. 315. Similar prayers in the vernacular were drawn up for the use of lay people during the recitation of the Canon by the officiating priest; ib. pp. 32-36, Text B. They are a survival from an Eastern source. A near approach to this whole passage, both in form and substance, is to be found in the following Missal Litany, transcribed by Wicelius from an ancient MS. in the Library of Fulda, and printed by Bona, Rer. Litur. lib. ii. cap. iv. § 3:—

'In Codice Fuldensi Litania Missalis.

(a) Dicamus omnes ex toto corde totaque mente: Domine miserere.

(β) Qui respicis terram et facis eam tremere. Oramus te, Domine, exaudi et miserere.

(γ) Pro altissima pace et tranquillitate temporum nostrorum. Oramus, &c.

(δ) Pro patre nostro episcopo, pro omnibus episcopis, ac presbyteris, et diaconis, omnique clero. Oramus, &c.

(e) Pro hoc loco et habitantibus in eo. Oramus, &c.

Pro piissimo imperatore et toto Romano exercitu. Oramus, &c.

Pro omnibus qui in sublimitate constituti sunt, pro virginibus, viduis, et orphanis. Oramus, &c.

(ς) Pro poenitentibus et catechumenis. Oramus, &c.

(θ) Pro his qui in sancta ecclesia fructus misericordiae largiuntur. Domine Deus virtutum exaudi preces nostras. Oramus, &c.

(ι) Sanctorum apostolorum ac martyrum memores sumus, ut, orantibus eis pro nobis, veniam mereamur. Oramus, &c.

(κ) Christianum ac pacificum nobis finem concedi a Domino comprecemur. Praesta, Domine, praesta.

(λ) Et divinum in nobis permanere vinculum charitatis, Dominum comprecemur. Praesta, Domine, praesta.

(μ) Conservare sanctitatem ac puritatem catholicae fidei sanctum Deum comprecemur. Praesta, Domine, praesta.

Dicamus omnes, Domine exaudi et miserere.'

We subjoin another form of Missal Litany, Gallican in its wording and character, written in a ninth-century hand on fol. 13 a, b of the Leofric Missal. It is not part of the Leofric Sacramentary, properly so called, but occurs on one of the miscellaneous leaves which have been bound up together at the commencement of the MS. volume which bears that name :—

'Oremus, fratres karissimi, domini misericordiam pro fratribus ac sororibus nostris ab oriente usque ad occidentem, ut et illi orent pro nobis unusquisque in diversis locis per christum dominum nostrum.

'Oremus etiam pro unitate aeclesiarum, pro infirmis, pro debilibus, pro captivis, pro poenitentibus, pro laborantibus, pro nauigantibus, pro iter agentibus, pro elemosinas facientibus, pro defunctorum spiritibus, et pro his qui non communicant, ut det illis dominus dignam agere poenitentiam, per christum dominum nostrum.

'Offerimus tibi, domine ihesu christe, hanc orationem ab ortu solis usque ad occidentem, a dextera usque ad sinistram, in honorem et gloriam diuinitatis christi et humanitatis, in honorem et gloriam omnium graduum coelestium, michahelem, gabrihelem archangelum; in honorem et gloriam patriarcharum, prophetarum, apostolorum, ac martyrum; pro omnibus uirginibus, fidelibus poenitentibus, pro omnibus matrimoniis, pro bonis non ualde, pro malis non ualde, pro omnibus merentibus orationem et deprecationem [note 22] nostram, per eundem.'

We may also compare the Deacon's Litany or Bidding Prayer (διακονία, εὐρημὰ, δεήσεις, μεγάλη συναπτή) in the Liturgy of St. Chrysostom, extracts from which are here appended in Goar's Latin translation (Eucholog. pp. 64-65) :—

(α) 'In pace Dominum precemur. Domine miserere.

(γ) Pro pace totius mundi [altissima = ὑπὲρ τῆς ἀνωθεν εἰρήνης] stabilitate sanctarum Dei ecclesiarum, et pro omnium concordia, Dominum precemur.

(δ) Pro Archiepiscopo nostro N. Venerandis presbyteris, in Christo Diaconis, universo clero Dominum precemur.

(ε) Pro hac sancta domo, et iis qui cum fide, religione, et Dei timore ipsam ingrediuntur, Dominum precemur.

(η) Pro nauigantibus, iter agentibus, aegrotis, laborantibus, captivis, et salute ipsorum, Dominum precemur.

(γ) There is a corresponding prayer in the Clementine Liturgy: 'Ἐπὲρ τῆς ἁγίας καθολικῆς καὶ ἀποστολικῆς ἐκκλησίας τῆς ἀπὸ περάτων ἕως περάτων δεηθῶμεν.

(ε) 'Ἐπὲρ τῆς ἐνθάδε ἁγίας παροικίας δεηθῶμεν.

(ζ) 'Ἐπὲρ . . . παρθένων, χηρῶν τε, καὶ ὀρφανῶν δεηθῶμεν.

(θ) 'Ἐπὲρ τῶν καρποφορούντων ἐν τῇ ἁγίᾳ ἐκκλησίᾳ καὶ ποιούντων τοῖς πένησι τὰς ἐλεημοσύνας δεηθῶμεν.

(κ, λ, μ) Ὑπὲρ ἀλλήλων δεηθῶμεν, ὅπως ὁ Κύριος τηρήσῃ ἡμᾶς καὶ φυλάξῃ τῇ αὐτοῦ χάριτι εἰς τέλος. Hammond, C. E., Lit. E. and W. p. 8.

The presence of these devotions in the Stowe Missal goes to support Goar's assertion that similar petitions were found in Western Liturgies before the ninth century (Euchol. p. 123. n. 62). We append the following specimen from the Ambrosian Missal, which also bears a close resemblance to the Stowe text (Pamel. Liturgicon, i. 328):—

'Dom. Quadrag. dicta De Samaitana.

Finita ingressa, preces per Diaconum pronunciatae, respondente choro (after each petition):—

(α) Domine miserere.

(β) Divinae pacis et indulgentiae munere supplicantes ex toto corde et ex tota mente precamur te.

(γ) Pro ecclesia tua sancta catholica, quae hic et per universum orbem diffusa est precamur te.

(δ) Pro papa nostro .N. et pontifice nostro .N. et omni clero eorum, omnibusque sacerdotibus ac ministris precamur te.

(ε) Pro famulo tuo .N. imperatore, et famula tua .N. imperatrice, et omni exercitu eorum, precamur te.

Pro famulo tuo .N. rege, et duce nostro, et omni exercitu ejus, precamur te.

Pro pace ecclesiarum, vocatione gentium, et quiete populorum, precamur te.

Pro civitate hac et conversatione ejus, omnibusque habitantibus in ea, precamur te.

Pro aeris temperie, ac fructuum, et fecunditate terrarum, precamur te.

(ς) Pro virginibus, viduis, orphanis, captivis, ac poenitentibus, precamur te.

Pro navigantibus, iter agentibus, in carceribus, in vinculis, in metallis, in exiliis constitutis, precamur te.

Pro his qui diversis infirmitatibus detinentur, quique spiritibus vexantur immundis, precamur te.

(θ) Pro his qui in sancta tua ecclesia fructus misericordiae largiuntur, precamur te.

(α) Exaudi nos, Deus, in omni oratione atque deprecatione nostra, precamur te.'

24. Notice the absence of any mention of the Pope or of the minor orders.

25. These words, 'piissimi imperatores,' are a direct translation of the εἰσεβέστατοι βασιλεῖς of the Liturgy of St. Chrysostom. They seem to suggest one of those various periods in the fourth century between the death of Constantine, A.D. 337, and the division of the Empire into East and West, A.D. 395, when several persons were associated on the imperial throne. It is as fruitless to enquire what possible meaning the Latin words can have borne in Ireland, as it was for Goar to ask to whom the Greek words referred, when he heard them used at Constantinople in the beginning of the seventeenth century (Euchol. p. 46. n. 2); or as it would be to ask who is meant in the petition, 'Oremus pro christianissimo imperatore nostro,' which occurs in the present Roman Missal on Good Friday. The phrase has been imported verbatim from the continent into the Irish Liturgy, without consideration that it thereby became unmeaning. It is noteworthy that the above-quoted Fulda Litany reads 'piissimo imperatore' in the singular, and that in the much later Corpus Irish Missal the 'rex' and 'exercitus Hiberniensium' are prayed for instead of the Roman emperor and army. See Intro. to Corpus Missal, p. 47.

Curious instances of a similar confusion may be found in foreign liturgical codices. In the Gregorian Sacramentary (Codex Ratoldi) the King of the Franks is elected to the 'regnum totius Albionis' (Migne, Pat. Lat. lxxviii. 257). The following passage occurs in the office for the Coronation of a King (Benedictio Regis) in a ninth-century Rheims Pontifical (Col. Agrip. Bib. Eccles. Metrop. no. 141; Hartzheim, Catalogus MSS. p. 111), in another Pontifical of the same date in the monastery 'Sancti Germani a Pratis' (Migne, Bib. Pat. Lat. lxxviii. 572), and in the service used at the coronation of Charles V of France (Cott. Tib. B. viii; Maskell, W., Mon. Rit. iii. 14):—

'Ut regale solium, videlicet Saxonum, Merciorum, Nordan-Humbrorumque sceptrum non deserat, sed ad pristinae fidei pacisque concordiam eorum animos, te opitulante, reformat, ut utrorumque horum populorum debita sibi subjectione fultus, cum digno amore per longum vitae spatium paternae apicem gloriae tuae miseratione unanimes stabilire et gubernare mereatur.'

The real explanation of the above passages is this. When Charles the Great abolished the national Liturgy in France, there was a sudden and great demand for new liturgical codices. Under Alouin's directions, Anglo-Saxon Office Books were imported into France for the purpose of being copied, and French scribes wrote them out, word for word, forgetting the geographical and dynastic differences of the two countries.

Menard's remarks on the above extracts illustrate the danger of basing historical conclusions on liturgical expressions: 'Quae quidem verba satis manifestant aliquem Francorum regem id temporis in Anglorum regem unctum fuisse; quod tamen est difficile scitu, cum nihil tale in historicis antiquis, cum Francorum, tum Anglorum, repereris, per quos huic difficultati lucem afferre quis possit.' Migne, Bib. Pat. Lat. lxxviii. 571, note 1090.

26. S. secret for Domin. prox. ante Adv.; Sac. Leon. p. 364; Gelas. p. 681.

27. Compare collect in Book of Hymns, p. 195.

28. This prayer is found in a similar position in the Mass published by M. Flavius Illyricus, its rubric directing 'inter lectionem et evangelium, id est tempore Gradualis, Alleluia, ac Sequentiae, episcopus dicat has orationes;' Martene, De Ant. Eccles. Rit. I. iv. art. xi. ordo 4. p. 182; also in a French Missal, c. A. D. 800; ib. ordo v. p. 187; in a ninth-century Troyes Pontifical after the Gospel; ib. ordo vi. p. 191; ib. viii. p. 194; ib. xiii. p. 207; ib. xvi. p. 215; after vesting; ib. xv. p. 210. Similar prayers under the title of 'Apologia' or 'Confessio Sacerdotis' are found in the Missale Gothicum, No. xxxvii; Mis. Moz., Leslie, tom. i. p. 224. Fifteen such forms exist in the Gregor. Sacram. as edited by Menard, pp. 228, 526, n. 78 b. A trace of it may exist in the solitary 'Oremus,' not followed by any prayer, in the present Roman Missal before the Offertory.

29. Anglice, 'A half uncovering here.' Some light is thrown on the meaning of this rubric, together with the corresponding Irish rubric on p. 232, by the following extract from a tract on the Eucharist preserved in the Leabhar Breac:—

'The two uncoverings, including the half of the chalice of the Offertory and of the Oblation, and what is chaunted with them, both in the Gospel and Alleoir (= Alleluia?), figure the written law in which Christ was manifestly foretold but was not seen until his birth. The elevation of the chalice of the Offertory and the paten, after the full uncovering at which is sung the verse "Immola Deo sacrificium laudis,"' Fol. 251. col. 1. Compare Stowe Mis. f. 64 b.

30. Ps. cxl. 2. It occurs as the Grad. and Vers., Fer. iii. post Invocavit; Dom. xix. post Trin.; Sabb. iv. Temp. Sept. (S.R.) It is also used in the Roman Ordinarium Missae, at the point where the priest incenses the altar.

31. This seems to have been the ancient Gallican position of the Preparation of the Chalice. It survived in the mediaeval French Uses of Amiens, Soissons, Chalons-sur-Saone, and in the English Use of Sarum (Mis. p. 587). The mixture of water with wine took place here also at Salisbury (ib.), and in other places (Mart. iv. 57); but there are no traces of such a rite here.

32. This prayer is said, with slight variation of reading, after the presentation of the elements in the present Roman rite. It is ordered in this form in the VI. Ordo Rom. § 10. Micrologus asserts that it was introduced into the Roman from the Gallican Use: 'Dicit sacerdos hanc orationem juxta Gallicanum Ordinem' (De Eccles. Observ. c. xi). In a ninth-century Rheims Missal it is said 'dum elevatur Sanctum a sacerdote' (Mart. i. p. 197).

33. St. John vi. 51-57. Various portions of this passage of St. John's Gospel occur among the Gospels in the 'Missae Defunctorum,' and in Festo Corporis Christi (R. S.).

34. Here follows a mutilated leaf two-thirds of which have been cut away. On the recto are written the words from Oratio Gregoriana—rl. The verso is blank.

34 a. Other collects 'post Evang.' are provided in the Antiphon. Benchor. p. 193; Book of Hymns, p. 196. This collect occurs twice in Sacr. Greg. pp. 34, 39.

35. This Creed was first introduced into the Liturgy of Constantinople by the Patriarch Timotheus, A.D. 511; into the Church of Spain and France (Gallia Narbonensis) by the second canon of the third Council of Toledo, A.D. 589; into the Roman Liturgy, probably in the reign of Henry II, A.D. 1002-1024, but possibly in that of Charlemagne (ninth century). There are no traces of its present liturgical use in the Gelasian and Gregorian Sacramentaries, or in the earliest Ordo Romanus. Mart. i. p. 138. Its position here may be accepted as prohibitive of the assignation of an earlier date than the ninth century to the Stowe Missal.

36. Anglice, 'A full uncovering here.' See note 29.

37. Ps. lxxxiv. 8. Book of Dimma, p. 170; Stowe Mis. p. 220.

38. This rubric has been added by a later hand.

39. R. S. Sec. in Nativ. Dmi. ad iii. Missam; Sacr. Gregor. pp. 10, 159. The wording of these collects seems to imply the joint presentation of both paten and chalice, in accordance with the later custom of Hereford (Mis. p. 117), Sarum (Mis. p. 593), and the following French churches—Moysac (Mart. i. p. 194), St. Thierry by Rheims (ib. p. 197), Soissons (ib. p. 220), Fécamp (ib. p. 229), Lehon (ib. p. 238), Le Bec (ib. p. 242). On the other hand, the Roman and York Missals (i. p. 171) direct that the elements shall be offered separately and consecutively, providing a separate collect of oblation for each.

It seems hardly fair to infer with Dr. O'Connor (Stowe Catalog. i. App. p. 47), from the absence here of any allusion to wine and water, that the mixed chalice was omitted 'as merely of human institution.'

39 a. Sacr. Leon. p. 352.

40. The allusion to the diptychs in this and the following collect, and the position of these intercessions for the departed before the Canon, is distinctly Ephesine, and has never been found in any Petrine Liturgy. They are specimens of the 'Collectio post nomina' of the Gallican and the 'Oratio post nomina' of the Mozarabic rite. A similar allusion to diptychs is contained in a passage in the Rede Boke of Darbye (an Anglo-Saxon MS. c. 1061, C. C. C. C. 422); but it has been shifted from its Gallican position before the Preface to its Roman position within the Canon, where it forms part of the present Commemoratio pro vivis: 'Memento, Domine, famulorum famularumque tuarum, omnis congregationis beatae Dei genitricis semperque virginis Mariae, omniumque propinquorum nostrorum, et quorum eleemosynas suscepimus, seu quorum nomina super sanctum altare tuum scripta habentur,' &c. This reading occurs nearly verbatim and in the same position in a tenth-century Sacramentary belonging to the monastery of Corbie, and quoted by Martene, vol. i. p. 146; and a similar allusion to diptychs placed on the altar is found in the marginal reading of an early Cologne Codex of the Gregorian Canon, printed by Pamelius (Liturgicon, vol. ii. p. 180).

There are references to both the 'reliquiae' and 'nomina sanctorum' in one of the many 'Secrets' supplied in the Missa Flacii Illyrici, introduced with this rubric:—

'Istae orationes cum oblationes offeruntur ad altare dicendae sunt, et haec est prima quotidiana et generalis.'

'Suscipe, sancta Trinitas, hanc oblationem, quam tibi offero in memoriam incarnationis, nativitatis, passionis, resurrectionis, ascensionis Domini nostri Jesu Christi, et in honorem sanctorum tuorum qui tibi placuerunt ab initio mundi, et eorum quorum hodie festivitas celebratur, et quorum hic nomina et reliquiae habentur, ut proficiat ad honorem,' &c. The collect of oblation now in the Roman Liturgy, p. 213, was introduced into it from a foreign source in the twelfth century (Le Brun, Explic. de la Messe, i. 354; Microlog. § xi).

The above collect and similar phrases occur in the eighth-century Gallican Missal published by Martene, ordo v. p. 189, which consists of the Roman Canon as introduced into Gaul under Charlemagne, interspersed with relics of the national but superseded Liturgy, and in a ninth-century Troye Pontifical (ib. ordo vi. p. 192), of Reims (ix. p. 196; x. p. 197; xv. p. 213; xvi. p. 215; xvii. p. 216; xxvii. p. 230). The Ordo Missae Flacii Illyrici (Mart. i. p. 185) contains a reference, under the title 'liber vitae,' to the diptychs with the names of the departed inscribed on them, in the later passage within the Canon, entitled in the present Roman Missal Commemoratio pro defunctis, but there

'Item pro salute vivorum et mortuorum.'

'Memento etiam . . . et animabus famulorum famularumque tuarum, vide licet omnium orthodoxorum, quorum commemorationem agimus, et quorum corpora hic et ubique requiescunt, vel quorum nomina hic in libro vitae scripta esse videntur, indulgentiam et remissionem omnium tribuas peccatorum, et in consortio electorum tuorum habere digneris.

'Hic recites nomina quorum velis.'

'Istis et omnibus fide catholica quiescentibus locum pacis, refrigerii et quietis indulgeas deprecamur.'

The expression 'the Book of Life' for the 'Diptychs' was perhaps derived from the East. Renaudot quotes a Nestorian writer as saying with reference to two Metropolitans, 'eorum nomina libro vitae inscripta non fuisse, eo quod contra leges ecclesiasticas dignitatem usurpaverant' (Liturg. Or. Coll. 1234).

41. There are frequent references to the Book of Life in the Gallican Orations post nomina. 'Litteris mereantur conscribi coelestibus'; Miss. Goth. ordo iii: 'in aeterno vitae libro conscribi'; Sacram. Gall., Mab. ed. p. 359: 'in coelesti pagina conscribi praecipias'; Miss. Goth. xxii: 'coelesti chirographo in libro vitae jubeas ascribi'; ib. xxiii, xxiv: 'in libro vitae censeas deputari'; ib. lv: 'in coelesti pagina jubeas intimari'; ib. lviii: 'in coelestibus paginis conscribantur'; ib. lxxv: 'aeternalibus indita paginis'; ib. xl: 'nomina jubeas scribi in aeternitate'; ib.

iv: 'nomina faciat in beatitudinem aeterni gaudii recenseri;' ib. liii: 'nomina aeternitatis titulo jubeas praesignari;' ib. xxvi: 'nomina figere in scripture sempiterna digneris;' ib. xxv: 'in aeterno vitae libro nomina conscribere;' Sacram. Gall., Mab. edit. p. 359: 'in libro vitae jubeas paginam intimare;' ib. 384. also in some Gallican prayers, surviving in an unpublished tenth-century French Greg. Sacr. (Bodl. Auct. D. i. 20, fol. 40 b). Similar phrases occur occasionally in the Mozarabic Liturgy (pp. 226, 286, 346, 415, 483, &c.), always including a reference both to the living and the dead. There is only one instance of such a phrase in the Roman books, and there the reference is to the living only (Sacram. Leon., Murat. edit. p. 318). For further information as to Celtic usage on this point, see p. 105. There is reference to a 'beatæ predestinationis liber,' in which are written 'nomina fidelium eorum quos in oratione commendatos suscepimus,' in a ninth-century French Codex (Mart. ordo x. p. 201). This collect reappears in the Anglo-Saxon Leofric Missal, fol. 237 b.

42 b. Oct. 1 was the Feast of the Holy Relics; F. cciv.

43. These tender expressions are peculiarly characteristic of the Gallican Liturgies. See Missale Richenovens. missa ii; Mis. Goth. ordo iii, xviii, xxxiii, xxxvii, liii, lviii; also Milanese fragment quoted in Peyron, Cic. Frag. Orat. p. 226.

44. The absence of the formulae of mutual salutation, 'Dominus vobiscum, Et cum spiritu tuo,' is worthy of notice. It formed part of the Gregorian, but not of the Gelasian Canon.

45. This Preface does not occur elsewhere, but there was a great wealth and beauty of Prefaces in early Western Liturgies. A variety of festivals is recognised in the paragraph 'Communicantes,' &c. within the Canon, p. 235, and other Prefaces occur on pp. 245-7-8.

46. Some of the expressions in this Preface, 'sanctus, fortis, immortalis,' occur in the Reproaches on Good Friday. Others, 'non unius singulariter personae sed unius trinitatis substantiae,' occur in the Roman Preface for the Feast of Trinity.

47. Anglice, 'Here the "Dignum" receives the addition if "per quem" follows in the text.' The Irish words run continuously together in the original text, both here and in the next rubric.

48. Anglice, 'Here the "Dignum" receives the addition if "sanctus" follows in the text.' 'The addition' referred to in both these Irish rubrics seems to be the 'Proper Preface' appointed for the festival.

49. This resembles the Mozarabic Post-Sanctus for Christmas Day (Migne Edit. p. 189), and that in the Missale Gothicum in Vigil. Natal. Domini. It is a survival of the varying Ephesine Canon, where it immediately precedes the 'Qui pridie.'

50. These words, sedis—episcopo, are omitted in the Gelasian and many Sacramentaries earlier than the tenth century, and do not form part of the text of the Canon as given by Micrologus, cap. 25. They are found, except the last four words, in the Codex Othobonianus, but not in the Codex Vaticanus of the Gregor. Sacram. Martene supplies two other instances of Missals (de Prez and Monte Casino) containing here a petition 'pro abbate nostro' (i. p. 145).

51. There is no rubric here in the later Irish Missals. The recitation of names is not ordered in any of the varying forms of this short rubric in the Roman Canon, or in the English. Uses of Sarum, Hereford, and York; but in some mediaeval Gallican forms of the Canon this 'Memento' includes a petition for those 'quorum nomina super sanctum altare tuum scripta habentur' (in a Reims Pontifical, Mart. ordo ix. p. 197). See note 40.

52. Note the absence of the tenth-century additional clause 'pro quibus tibi offerimus vel.' Comp. Corpus Missal, p. 3, where the omission still survives in a twelfth-century text.

53. Cap. lxvii. of the Rule of St. Benedict is entitled 'De fratribus in viam directis.' Comp. the language in a Contestatio Paschalis in the Sacram. Gallicanum, 'dum justos per viam rectam gradientes coelestem ducit ad patriam' (Mabillon, Mus. Ital. i. 332).

54. The festivals here commemorated are—

(1) 'Natale Domini' = Christmas Day.

(2) 'Kl.' (= Kalendis Januariis), Feast of the Circumcision.

(3) 'Stella' = Feast of the Epiphany.

(4) 'Natalis Calicis' = Maundy Thursday. So in the Kalendar of Polemius Silvius for March 24, 403; Migne, Bib. Pat. Lat. xiii. 678. Both Dr. O'Connor and Dr. Todd unaccountably refer this phrase to 'Ash Wednesday.' Neither interpretation suits the preceding heading 'Stellae.'

(5) 'Pasca' = Easter Day.

(6) 'Clausula Pasca' = Low Sunday, or Clausum Paschae. Mis. Goth. No. xlv. p. 108.

(7) 'Ascensio' = Holy Thursday.

(8) 'Dies Quinquagesimae,' or 'Pentacosten' = Whitsun Day.

The occasions on which a variation occurs in the clause 'Communicantes,' &c. in the present Roman Canon are Christmas, Epiphany, Maundy Thursday, Eastertide, Holy Thursday, Whitsuntide. We have independent testimony that some such variation formed part of the original Gelasian text in a letter written by Pope Vigilius to Profuturus Bishop of Braga in Spain, A.D. 538, in which he said: 'Ordinem quoque precum in celebritate missarum nullo nos tempore, nulla festivitate, significamus habere divisum, sed semper eodem tenore oblata Deo munera consecrare. Quoties vero Paschalis, aut Ascensionis Domini, vel Pentecostes, et Epiphaniae, Sanctorumque Dei fuerit agenda festivas singula, capitula diebus apta subjungimus, quibus commemorationem sanctae solemnitatis, aut eorum faciamus quorum natalitia celebramus, caetera vero ordine consueto persequimur.' Migne, Bib. Pat. Lat. lxi. p. 18.

55-55. The presence here of these seven words is not inconsistent with Mr. Simmons' suggestion that they may have been introduced into the Canon by Eugenius I, 655-8. The Gelasian title of this Canon must not be pressed to confirm his other supposition that they may have formed part of the Canon before the time of St. Gregory. (Early Eng. Text Soc. vol. 71. p. 356.)

56. An allusion to a special Church is contained in the Deacon's Litany or Bidding Prayer in the Liturgy of Constantinople: ὕπὲρ τοῦ ἁγίου οἴκου τούτου, καὶ τῶν μετὰ πίστewς, εὐλαβείας, καὶ φόβου Θεοῦ εἰσιόντων ἐν αὐτῷ τοῦ Κυρίου δεηθῶμεν. (Hammond, C. E., edit. p. 91.) Another instance is found in the earliest extant form of those bidding prayers which, derived from the East through the ancient Gallican Church, form one of the distinguishing characteristics of the Anglican Liturgy: 'Wutan we gebiddan for ealles thaes folces gebed þe þas halgan stowe mid ælmesan seceth,' &c. = Let us pray for all those people's prayer who seek this holy place with alms, &c. (From a York MS. saec. x, printed by Early Eng. Text Soc. vol. 71. p. 62.)

57. This passage suggests the possibility of the Stowe Canon being part of a Missa Dedicacionis. A special 'Hanc igitur' is very common in the Gelasian, rare in the Gregorian Sacramentary, and only occurs thrice in the present Roman Missal. There is a 'Hanc igitur' similar in intent but with little verbal identity in an 'Ordo ad dedicandam basilicam,' ex MS. Missal. Gellonens. (eighth century), published by Martene, tom. ii. p. 246. The present passage refers to a particular church, the founder or builder of which was still living; and the prayer that he and all the people may be converted from idolatry may imply that the founder was himself a pagan, and proves that when the words were written paganism was not extinct in Ireland. This is important as bearing upon the date of the Stowe Missal. It affords an instance of literal compliance with can. 19 of the Council of Emerita, A.D. 666: 'Salubri deliberatione censemus, ut pro singulis quibusque ecclesiis, in quibus presbyter jussus fuerit per sui episcopi ordinationem praeesse, pro singulis diebus Dominicis sacrificium Deo procuraret offerre, et eorum nomina a quibus eas ecclesias constat esse constructas, vel qui aliquid his sanctis ecclesiis videntur aut visi sunt contulisse si viventes in corpore sunt ante altare recitentur tempore missae; quod si ab hac discesserunt vel discesserint luce, nomina eorum cum defunctis fidelibus recitentur suo ordine.' (Labbe, tom. vi. col. 507.)

58-58. These words (diesque—numerari) are said by Bede (Hist. Ec. lib. ii. cap. i) to have been added to the Canon by Gregory the Great, but they are found in the Codex Vaticanus of the Gelasian Canon published by Muratori (p. 696).

59-59. This passage (passionem—coelis) occurs at the close of the 'Qui pridie' in the Ambrosian Liturgy. (Pamel. Liturg. i. p. 302.) A similar passage occurs in the Greek Liturgies of St. James, St. Basil, St. Chrysostom, St. Mark, in the Coptic St. Cyril and St. Basil, and in the Æthiopic. (Hammond, C. E., Lit. pp. 70, 111, 112, 187, 211, 220, 258; compare also the closing words of the Prayer of Consecration in the Mozarabic Liturgy, p. 117.)

60. This expression (sacrificium spirituale) occurs in the Post-com. for St. Patrick's Day in the Drummond, Corpus, and Rosslyn Irish Missals, p. 271. It is uncommon in Western liturgical phraseology, although 'spiritualis' as an epithet of 'cibus' or 'poculum' is frequently met with. Compare the following passage in the Mozarabic Preface for ii. Domin. post Oct. Epiphan.: 'Nam licet verum corpus edatur, et sanguis manifestissimus hauriatur, nullus tamen horror incutitur, cum salus animarum in spirituali cibo et poculo ministratur;' p. 249. The equivalent ἡ πνευματικὴ θυσία is used by St. Cyril of Jerusalem, Catech. Myst. v. § vi, ed. A.D. 1631, p. 241.

80 a. The expression 'Electus dei athleta' occurs in Lib. Hymn. f. 31 b. For the superfluous 'n' see Corpus Missal, p. 35.

61. There is a passage similar to this in the Commemoratio pro vivis in the Mozarabic Liturgy, § 225: 'Offerunt Deo Domino oblationem sacerdotes nostri, Papa Romensis et reliqui pro se et pro omni clero ac plebibus ecclesiae sibi committunt, vel pro universa fraternitate. Item offerunt universi presbyteri, diaconi, clerici, ac populi circumstantes, in honorem sanctorum pro se et suis.' Compare also the following Collectio post nomina for Easter Eve in the Missale Gothicum; 'Oremus pro his qui offerunt munera Domino Deo nostro sacrosancta spiritalia, pro se, et pro caris suis, et pro spiritibus carorum suorum, in commemoratione sanctorum martyrum; ut Dominus Deus noster preces illorum clementer exaudire dignetur. Per Resurgentem.' Mis. Goth. p. 98.

The order of intercessions as arranged in St. Columbanus' Rule has been already referred to, p. 251, n. 22. The word 'senior' has occurred on fol. 23 b. It also occurs in the Regula Columbani, c. 7; Poenitentiale, c. 28; in the Missale Gallicanum, p. 159; Tertullian, Apolog. 39. It is explained by Alcuin, Lib. de Div. Off. p. 61, edit. Hittorp. In the Irish Rule of St. Columba the head of a community is entitled 'senóra.' (H. and S. ii. p. 119.) In the Missa Flacii Illyrici there is a collect commencing 'Suscipe Sancta Trinitas hanc oblationem quam (offero tibi) pro seniore nostro, et cuncta congregatione sancti Petri,' &c. (Mart. i. p. 184.) The presence of this passage here is one of various slight indications that this Ordo Missae, which was written c. A.D. 900, and for which such various origins have been claimed (ib. p. 176), may have been of Irish origin. The word 'seniores' occurs repeatedly in consecutive clauses in a charter of confederation of German monasteries in an eleventh-twelfth century Cod. Vindobonensis printed by Gerbert, ii. 140. The Latin 'senior' and Celtic 'senóra' became 'aldor' or 'aldermann' in Anglo-Saxon times. In the ecclesiastical laws of Wihtred King of Kent, promulgated at Bersted in 696, it was enacted, 'Mynstres aldor hine cænne in preostes canne' = Let the senior of a minster clear himself with a priest's clearance (No. xvii. H. and S. iii. 236). In the Ormulum (thirteenth century, line 6304) the word 'aldermann' occurs in the same sense; for several other instances of this use of the word in the same work, see R. M. White's edit., Oxford, 1852, vol. ii. p. 442.

62. Many of the names of saints in the following lists are in the genitive case—a common occurrence in ancient martyrologies—the word festum being understood. The writer appears to have copied out the names forgetting always to change the genitive into a vocative case. The frequent repetitions are caused by the existence of more than one saint bearing the same name. I can detect no paleographical evidence for the statement endorsed by Mr. Scudamore (Notit. Euch. p. 425, second edit.) that the 'ora pro nobis' has been added throughout by the later hand of a scribe who was ignorant of the real purport of the list, but the whole of fol. 29 a b is written in a later handwriting on an interpolated leaf. Fol. 30 a b is also an addition to the original text, which passed on at once to the long list of departed saints commencing on fol. 31 a. For similar Litanies to the Saints, see Gerbert, Lit. Al. ii. 34. Brit. Mus. Add. MSS. 28, 188.

63. March 17. Apostle of Ireland, ob. 493.

64. Sept. 12. First Bp. of Emly, patron of Munster, ob. 534. [B. F. p. ccxii.]

65. March 2. Bp. of Cluain-Iraird, now Clonard, ob. 549. [B. Book of Obits, p. lxxxvi.]

66. March 16. Abb., ob. 615. [B. F. p. ccxii = Finan.]

67. March 5. Of Saighir, = Cornish Piran, older than St. Patrick. [B. F. p. ccxxxii.]

68. Sept. 9. Kieran, or Queranus, first Abb. of Clonmacnoise, ob. 549. [B. D.]

69. May 16. The elder Abb. of Clonfert, ob. 576. [B. D.] There are ten saints bearing this name in D. = Brenann of Cluain-ferta, F. p. ccxxvi.

70. Dec. 13. Abb. of Tyrdaglas, one of the twelve apostles of Ireland. [B. D. F. p. ccxxxvii.] The names of the twelve Irish apostles are given in F. p. cxviii.

71. June 9. Abb. of Iona, ob. 597. Two other Columbs are commemorated in F., June 7, Sept. 6.

72. May 10. Comgallus, Abb. and Conf. of Bangor in the sixth century. [Book of Obits, p. lxi; F. p. ccxxxvii.] There are seven saints of this name commemorated in D.

73. Oct. 11. Cannicha, or Canice, Abb. and Conf., founder of Achad-bho, now Aghaboe, ob. 598. [B. D.] = Caindech, F. p. ccxxviii.

74. Sept. 25. Barrus, Bp. of Cork. [B. D.] Or July 4, Findbarr of Magh Bile, F. p. cclxii.

75. Dec. 6. Nessian, or Neassan, Bp. [B. D. F. p. ccclix.]

76. Jan. 19. Factnae, Bp. of Nuachonghbail. [D. F. p. cclix.]

77. Aug. 4. Luan, or Molua, or Lugeus, or Lugidus, Abb. of Cluain-fertamolua, ob. 622. [B. D.] Or Abb. of Lismore in the Hebrides; [Book of Obits, p. lxxv.]

78. March 18. Lactenus, or Lactinus, Abb. of Achadh-Ur, and Bp., ob. 622. [B. D. Colgan, Acta SS. p. 655.]

79. April 15. Abb. of Lothra, ob. 584. [B. D. F. p. ccxix.]

80. March 5. Carthach, Abb. and Bp., succeeded St. Kieran the elder. [B. D. F. p. ccxxx.]

81. June 3. Coemgen, or Kevin, Abb. of Gleann-da loch = Glendalough, ob. 615. [B. D. Book of Obits, p. xlvi; F. p. cccxxvi.]

82. March 8. There are eleven saints of this name commemorated in D. The person represented by this name may be S. Mochonna, ob. 704; F. ccxciii.

83. Feb. 1. Virgin, Abbess of Kildare, ob. 523. [B. D. F. p. ccxxvii.]

84. Jan. 15. Ite, or Ythe, or Mida, Virgin of Cluain-creadhail and Abbess, ob. 569. [B. D. F. p. cclxxix.]

85. Jan. 1. Or Sceath, Virgin, of Feart-Scethe. [D. T.] Perhaps she may be identified with Scite or Scithe, commemorated on May 13 in the Lib. S. Trinitatis [Book of Obits, pp. lxi, 115], or with Sciath, Sept. 6; F. ccxci.

86. Nov. 9. Sincha, or Sinech, of Cluain-Leith-teangadh, Virgin. There are three other saints of this name commemorated in D. [Book of Obits, p. lxxix; F. ccxcv.]

87. Dec. 19. Perhaps Samhthann, Virgin, of Cluain-Bronaigh, ob. 734. [D.] Samthann, Samdann, F. p. ccxci.

88. This prayer of St. Ambrose is found in a 'Libellus sacrarum precum' written at Fleury c. A.D. 900, and printed by Martene (De Ant. Eccl. Rit. lib. iv. c. 34, tom. iii. p. 245). Its liturgical use is found in many a French Missal written c. A.D. 800-900. (Ib. lib. i. cap. iv. art. xii. ordd. v, vi, vii, ix, xiii, xiv, xv, xvi.) There are many variations in the text. Its usual position is at a much earlier point in the service, either among the 'Orationes ante Missam,' or immediately before the 'Secreta.'

89. For these unintelligible words (quorum ut dixit) most forms of the prayer substitute 'immundi sicut pannus menstruatae. Indigni sumus, Jesu Christe ut simus viventes sed tu qui non vis mortem peccatoris da nobis veniam in carne constitutis, ut per poenitentiae labores vita aeterna perfruamur in coelis, per te, Jesu Christe, qui,' &c.

90. = Abel. These 'Nomina justorum ac prophetarum' occur at the commencement of a long Litany in an eleventh-century Psalter at Florence (Bibl. Laur. Plut. xvii. cod. iii. fol. 144 a), where Seth, Melchisedech, Joseph, Job, Joshua, Tobit, the tres pueri, and the Machabeorum infantes are omitted, and Aaron, Elijah, and Elisha are added. Patriarchs and prophets are also commemorated in the Félice of Oengus, in the Kalendar of the Drummond Missal, and in the Book of Obits of Christ Church, Dublin. See S. Hieron. Martyrologium, Migne, Pat. Lat. Curs. xi. 437. In the York Bidding prayer, tenth century, people are invited to pray for the souls of all that have believed in Christ, 'fram Adames dæge to pisum dæge.' Early Eng. Text. Soc. vol. 71. p. 62. The same wide range is included in the language of early Eastern Liturgies, as in the Oratio generalis of the Syro-Jacobite Ordo: 'Memoriam agimus . . . eorum etiam qui nobiscum adstant et orant, cum omnibus qui a saeculo tibi placuerunt ab Adamo ad hanc usque diem.' Renaudot, Liturg. Orient. Coll. ii. 16.

91. Dots placed over the lower Madiani imply that the word has been repeated by error. Matthias and Barnabas usually occupy the place here assigned to Madius [D. Jan. 24]. Forbes, A. P., Kalendar of Scot. Ch. p. 382. But this name occupies the same anomalous position elsewhere; pp. 180, 226. Madius is the mediaeval Hiberno-Latin form of Matthias, who is commemorated under the name of Madius in the Féilire of Oengus; Leabhar Breac, fol. 82 b; in a list of the Apostles, ib. p. 91; Hymnus Cuminei, Lib. Hymn. p. 77; on the last page of the Appendix to the Glamis copy of the Aberdeen Breviary, printed in facsimile by D. Laing at the end of his Pref. to the Brev. Aberdeen.

92. Did the scribe mean to write 'tarum'?

93. March 17. Apostle of Ireland, ob. 493.

94. Aug. 24. Abb. and Bp., nephew of the former, Or is one of these two Patricks to be identified with Palladius?

95. Nov. 27. Or Sechnall, British by birth, coadjutor of St. Patrick, ob. 448. [Book of Obits, p. lxxxv. F. p. cccxii.]

96. Sept. 16. British by birth, coadjutor of St. Patrick, ob. 454. [Book of Obits, p. lxxvii.]

97. Dec. 2. British by birth, coadjutor of St. Patrick.

98. A disciple of St. Kieran, ob. 499. [Colgan, Acta SS. 473.]

99. April 16. First Bp. of Slane, ob. 514. [B.] Nov. 2, F. clxii.

100. Not identified. The name Cathar occurs in F. lxiv, lxxii.

101. April 23. Iobhar, Bp., coadjutor of St. Patrick, ob. 500. [B. D. F. p. cclxxiv.]

102. See note 64.

103. Feb. 2, or May 3. Conlaedh, Bp. of Kildare, ob. 519.

104. Aug. 1. Is this Mica of Ermudhe? [D.]

105. Is this Mac Nisse, founder and first bishop of the See of Connor, ob. 513? [Book of Obits, p. lxxii]; or one of the five Nessans commemorated in D?

106. March 1. Maoinenn, Bp. of Clonfert, disciple of St. Brendan, ob. A.D. 572. [Four Masters, D.]

107. March 1 and 8. Senan, Bp. of Inis-Cathaigh, ob. 544. [F. cccxiii.]

108. See note 74.

109. A portion of this word is erased in the MS.

110. Is this Colman, Bp. of Glendalough, ob. Dec. 13, 659? There are ninety-seven persons of this name commemorated in D. 17, in F. p. ccxxxvi.

111. April 2. Alias Mochua, Abb. [B.] Twelve persons named Cuanus are commemorated in Colgan's Acta SS. St. Cuana of Kill-chuana, alias Killkanny, Co. Clare, ob. 650.

112. Nov. 17. Is this Dulech, or Duileach, or Doulough, Bp. and Conf.? [D. Book of Obits, pp. xli, lxxx.]

113, 114, 115. Second, third, and fourth Archbps. of Canterbury. The presence of these names proves the existence of intercourse between the Anglo-Saxon and Irish Churches. The absence of St. Augustine's name is remarkable, but may be accounted for by the feeling of hostility which existed between him and the Celtic clergy. Laurence is known to have written a letter to the Irish bishops, urging them in vain to come to terms of union with the Anglo-Saxon Church. Bede H. E. ii. 4. St. Augustine is commemorated in F., May 24.

116. Nov. 10. Aedh, Bp. of Ciltair, ob. 588. There are twenty-six saints of this name commemorated in D. See F. p. ccxi.
117. Sept. 13. Bp. of Inver-Daoile; see also March 12. [D. F. p. ccxlv.]
118. April 4 or 5. Bp. of Clogher, founder of Clones (Cluaineois), ob. 548. [B. D. F. p. ccxxiii.]
119. Aug. 22. Mochteus, first Bp. of Louth, ob. 535 = Mochta. D. Or Aug. 19, or March 24, as in Colgan's Acta SS.
120. Nov. 24. Bp. of Daimhliag, ob. 488. [D.] The other saints of this name are found under Feb. 25, Nov. 29, Nov. 24. F. p. ccxxxii.
121. Dec. 7. Buite, or Boetius, or Beo, now St. Baoithin, Bp., ob. 520. The festival of his elevation is on Dec. 11. [D. Book of Obits, p. xlix. F. p. ccxxxviii.]
122. Aug. 23. Eoghan, or Eugesius, Bp. of Ard-sratha (Ardstraw, Tyrone), ob. 570 or 618. There are nine other saints of this name commemorated. [D. F. p. cclvi.]
123. July 24. Declan, Deccan, or Deglan, Bp. of Ard-mor, fifth century. [B. D. F. p. cclxv.]
124. March 5. Is this Carthach, Bp. and Abb. of Druim-fertain? [B. D. F.] Two other saints of this name are commemorated on March 26, May 14. A Carthagius is named in Colgan's Acta SS. p. 473.
125. Feb. 6. Perhaps = Mel, Bp. of Ard-achadh, nephew and disciple of St. Patrick, ob. 487. [B. D.]
126. Sept. 25. Ruine. [T.]
127. Dec. 1. Uinnian, or Finnian, or Finnen, Bp. and Conf., of Maghbile, ob. 578. [Lib. Hymn p. 100.]
128. See note 67.
129. Nov. 17. Of Cill-mor. Six saints of this name (Oenghus) are commemorated in D. F. ccci.
130. March 21. Enda, Abb. of Isle of Aran. [B. D.] See Dec. 31, F. cclvi.
131. Nov. 4. Gildas the elder, ob. 512; the younger, ob. 570. Jan. 29. [B.]

136. See note 71.
137. There are 230 Irish saints bearing this name. [B. D.]
138. See note 72.
139. See note 81.
140. This word occurs in the Collectio post nomina in Mis. Goth. ordd. xvii, xl. In ordo xxxiii. there is an Oratio pro spiritibus pausantium; so in the Sacram. Gallican., Mab. edit. p. 321; in the Commemoratio pro defunctis in the Mozarabic Liturgy, §§ 226, 252, pp. 114, 168, 603, 730; in the Poenitentiale of Cuminius, p. 23. n. 1. Adamnan speaks of St. Columba's grave as 'locus in quo ipse sancta pausant ossa' (lib. iii. cap. 23). 'Pausantes' for 'mortui,' 'pausatorium' for 'sepulchrum,' are words of rare use in late Latin; vid. Du Cange, sub voc. 'Pausare' is the word generally employed in the Annals of Ulster (saec. xiv-xv. Rawl. MSS. B. 489, fol. 9 b, &c.) in recording the deaths of bishops and abbots, whereas 'quievit, mortuus est,' &c. are used in the case of kings and other lay persons. Pausare is used in the same sense in early mortuary inscriptions in the Roman Catacombs (De Rossi, Inscriptiones Christianae, sub an. 353), and in early Christian inscriptions in Gaul

(Le Blant's edit. nos. 230, 511, 534). It occurs also in a collect in the Coemiterii Benedictio in the Roman Pontifical, 'Deus sancte, Pater O,' &c. 'Ανάμνησις and ἀνάμνησθαι are words in frequent use in the Eastern Liturgies of St. Clement, St. James, St. Basil, St. Chrysostom (Hammond's, C. E., edit. pp. 20, 36, 38, 115, 118, &c.). Compare the Oratio post Diptycha in the Coptic Lit. (Anaphora of St. Cyril, Hammond's edit. p. 210) on behalf of 'omnium quorum nomina recitamus et quorum non recitamus, quos unusquisque nostrum in mente habet, et eorum quorum memoria non occurrit nobis qui dormierunt et quieverunt in fide Christi,' &c. The whole of the paragraph 'Memento etiam Domine famulorum' in the Roman Canon is preceded in some ancient MSS. by the title 'Super Diptycha.' In a tenth-century Tours Sacramentary that title is followed by the rubric, 'Si fuerint nomina defunctorum recitentur. Dicat sacerdos: Memento etiam, &c. . . in somno pacis. Deinde postquam recitati fuerint, dicat sacerdos: Ipsi et omnibus,' etc. It is not easy to assign the exact date at which the custom fell into desuetude. Martene (i. p. 150) quotes at length the diptychs as read at Amiens early in the twelfth century, but the custom had become generally obsolete a century or two before that date. The diptychs in this Irish Missal, consisting of forty-seven names from Abel to Coemgeni, are of unusual length. One would at least equally have expected to find them connected with the two collects preceding the Sursum Corda (q. v. p. 233).

140 a. Compare the following ancient and anonymous inscription in the church of St. Allyre in Gaul: 'Hic requiescunt corpora sanctorum quorum nomina Deus scit.' Le Blant, Inscript. Chrét. de la Gaule, No. 563, where further instances of the early use of the phrase are supplied in the notes.

141. Anglice, 'Here the oblation is lifted over the chalice, and half of the bread is dipped into the chalice.'

142. Ps. xxxii. 22. See below, n. 146.

144. Luc. xxiv. 35. See below, n. 147.

145. Adapted from 1 Cor. x. 16.

146. Ps. xxxii. 22. See above, n. 142.

147. Luc. xxiv. 35. See above, n. 144.

148. Similar confessions of faith are found in various Eastern Liturgies; the Syriac Lit. of St. James, Hammond's edit. p. 77; the Ethiopic Lit., ib. p. 261. They are also found in the Mozarabic Liturgy, pp. 116, 118, 1009.

149. Confractio. The word confringo is found in the Gallican and Ambrosian words of Institution, and we may infer from this passage that it was employed in the ancient Celtic Prayer of Consecration. Compare the Gallican Post Secreta for Christmas Day: 'Credimus, Domine, adventum tuum, recolimus passionem tuam. Corpus tuum in peccatorum nostrorum remissionem contractum. Sanguis sanctus tuus in pretium nostrae redemptionis effusus est, qui cum Patre,' etc. (Missale Gothicum, Mab. edit. p. 192).

150. 'Praeceptis salutaribus moniti' Miss. Rom. This difference from the unvarying Roman formula of introduction to the Pater Noster is noteworthy. See St. Gall MS. No. 1394, p. 177; Book of Dimma, p. 169.

151. 'Libera nos, quaesumus, Domine ab omnibus malis praeteritis, praesentibus, et futuris, et intercedente pro nobis beata et gloriosa semper Virgine Dei Genitrice Maria, cum beatis Apostolis tuis Petro, et Paulo, atque Andrea'

Miss. Rom. The name of Patrick is substituted for Andrew in the text, in accordance with the very early custom of the priest inserting here at his option the names of patron or local saints. St. Andrew is also omitted in a ninth-century Gallican Missal quoted by Martene (i. p. 152). St. Ambrose is added in a Milanese Missal, A.D. 1560; Dionysius, Eletherius and Rusticus, in a eighth and ninth century Gallican Missal (Mart. i. ordo v. p. 190; see ordo ix. p. 197).

152. The Roman formula is 'Pax Domini sit semper vobiscum.' This is the Roman position of the Pax. In the Gallican and Mozarabic Liturgies it preceded the Sursum corda. The wording of the text resembles somewhat the Mozarabic formula, 'Gratia Dei Patris omnipotentis, pax ac dilectio Domini nostri Jesu Christi, et communicatio Spiritus Sancti sit semper cum omnibus nobis' (p. 115). It occurs again with a verbal alteration on p. 224; Book of Dimma, p. 170.

153. Here follow in the Gelas. Canon. twelve Postcommuniones and fifteen Benedictiones super populum. Muratori edit. p. 698.

154. Similar words accompany the bestowal of the Pax in the Mozarabic Liturgy, § 226, p. 115.

155. The Commixture here precedes the Agnus Dei, according to the Roman Use, differing from that of Sarum, Hereford and York, and from mediaeval French Liturgies. Mart. i. ordo v. p. 190; vi. p. 192; vii. p. 193; viii. p. 194.

156. The Agnus Dei was appointed to be sung here by Sergius, i. 687-701. It was always sung once or thrice. Here apparently it is to be used twice (so John of Avranches, de Eccles. Offic. c. xlviii). There was some variation in the wording of the third clause, which does not however appear to have been elsewhere entirely omitted (Gerbert, Disquis. iv. vol. i. p. 381). The Agnus Dei is omitted altogether from other editions of the Gelas. Sacram.; Muratori, Lit. Rom. i. 698; Scudamore, W. E., Notit. Euchar. 2nd edit. p. 679.

157. Ioan. xiv. 27. St. Gall MS. 1394, p. 177.

158. For the whole of this passage compare the Irish fragment of St. Gall MS. No. 1394, p. 177; the extracts from the Antiphonarium Benchorense (p. 192), and from the Books of Deer (p. 165), Dimma (p. 170), and Mulling (p. 173). This is very nearly the anthem sung in the Mozarabic Liturgy by the choir at the Kiss of Peace, § 226, p. 546. I have not found any passage resembling it in any printed or MS. edition of the Gelasian or Gregorian Sacramentaries.

169. Ioan. vi. 59. V. om. vivus. St. Gall MS. 1394, p. 177; Antiphon. Benchor. p. 192. This passage occurs as part of the Communio in the Ethiopic Liturgy, Hammond's edit. p. 262. It is also part of the Mozarabic Ad Accedendum for the third Sunday in Lent, p. 343.

175. This formula of administration is found in the St. Gall MS. No. 1394, p. 178; Antiphon. Benchor. p. 192. It appears, like the formula in the Book of Deer, &c. (p. 164), to involve Communion in both kinds at once.

176. Ps. cxviii. 171. V. 'Eructabunt labia mea hymnum, cum docueris me iustificationes tuas.' St. Gall MS. 1394, p. 178; Antiphon. Benchor. p. 192.

177. Ps. xxxiii. 2. Mozar. Lit. § 232, p. 565.

178. Ps. xxxiii. 9; Antiphon. Benchor. p. 192. This is sung during the fraction in the Greek Lit. of St. James (Hammond, C. E., edit. p. 51). The whole of this psalm was ordered to be sung during the Communion of the people, in the Apostolic Constitutions (lib. viii. c. 13, al. 20). St. Cyril speaks of this verse being sung in his time (348-86) at Jerusalem: μερὰ ταῦτα ἀκούετε τοῦ ψάλλοντος μερὰ μέλους θείου προτρεπομένου ὑμᾶς εἰς τὴν κοινωνίαν τῶν ἁγίων μυστηρίων καὶ λέγοντος, Γεύσαθε καὶ ἴδετε ὅτι χρηστὸς ὁ Κύριος, κ. τ. λ. St. Ambrose alludes to it as sung at Milan in the same century: 'Unde et ecclesia videns tantam gratiam hortatur filios suos GUSTATE ET VIDETE QUONIAM SUAVIS EST DOMINUS,' &c. It is the ordinary Antiphona ad accedentes in the Mozarabic Liturgy, except from the first Sunday in Lent to the vigil of Pentecost (Hammond, C. E., edit. p. 349). It does not form part now, though it did form part of the Roman Liturgy in St. Jerome's days, who said, 'Quotidie celestis pane saturati dicimus, Gustate et videte quam suavis est Dominus' (Comment. in Es. ii. c. v. 20; Migne, Bib. Pat. Lat. xxiv. 88).

179. Ioan. xii. 26. V. 'Ubi sum ego, illic et minister meus erit.' St. Gall MS. 1394, p. 178.

180. Mat. xix. 14. V. 'Sinite parvulos et nolite eos prohibere ad me venire,' &c. The employment of this verse as a Communion anthem points to the custom of infant communion. There is a rubric in the twelfth-century Irish Ordo Baptismi in the Corpus Missal, ordering the confirmation of infants, which was probably a prelude to their communion (fol. 203a); St. Gall MS. 1394, p. 178, commencing with 'Nolite.'

181. Mat. iii. 2. St. Gall MS. 1394, p. 178.

182. Mat. xi. 12. St. Gall MS. 1394, p. 178.

183. Mat. xxv. 34. V. 'possidete paratum vobis regnum a constitutione mundi.' St. Gall MS. 1394, p. 178. This is the Mozarabic 'Sacrificium' in festo SS. Servandi et Germani, p. 884.

183a. See p. 165, n. 1.

184. This is an early Irish name belonging to a period when Pagan names were still retained, but the bearer of it has not yet been identified. Used as a prefix, Maol, Mael, or Moel, means the servant or devotee of the person whose name follows, as Maol Colaim, Maol Seacnaill; so here Moel Caich. It is the old Irish word for 'tonsus.'

185. St. Gall MS. No. 1394, p. 179, where see note 2.

186. This prayer is the 'Consummatio Missae' in the Sacramentarium Gallicanum, p. 209. It occurs in the ninth-century Irish fragment at St. Gall, No. 1394 (p. 179). The first part, 'Gratias ueniam,' occurs in the Leon. Sacr., mense Jul. No. xxiv, the remainder in mense Sept. No. iii, with verbal variations. Comp. the thanksgiving collect in the Sarum Canon, 'Gratias tibi ago,' &c., p. 626. For the generally Ephesine character of these forms of thanksgiving, see Book of Deer, p. 165, n. 7.

187. This is the Mozarabic formula for conclusion 'in feriali officio.'

188. The omission of any allusion to the ablutions and to the final Gospel 'In principio' is common to all Missals written before the twelfth-thirteenth century. The earliest date of any allusion to those customs in the Church of these islands is given in the Early Eng. Text Soc. vol. 71. pp. 301, 383.

189. This Missa bears a general resemblance in its length of collects, possession of a Proper Preface, width of application, exhaustive enumeration of orders of saints, to a Missa generalis printed by Martene from a ninth-century codex belonging to a monastery at Rheims (De Eccles. Antiq. Rit. i. p. 197). Compare the title on p. 226.

190. Compare the language in the Faeth Fiada, the ancient Irish Hymn of St. Patrick: 'I bind to myself to-day the power of the love of seraphim, in the obedience of angels, in the hope of Resurrection unto rewards, in prayers of patriarchs, in predictions of prophets, in the precepts of apostles, in the faith of confessors, in the purity of holy virgins, in works of just men. (Kilkenny Archaeol Soc. 1868, p. 295; Todd, J. H., Life of St. Patrick, p. 427.)

191. In these words we have at least one form of the opening words of the Prayer of Consecration in the Celtic Church. As in the case of the Gallican Liturgy the opening words of the Canon down to 'Qui pridie' varied with each festival. The Gallican Canon for Christmas Eve opened with the words of the Canon in this Irish Missa, 'Vere sanctus, vere benedictus,' &c. Daniel, Cod. Lit. i. p. 83; Mabillon, Lit. Gall. p. 188. See p. 109.

192. The words of consecration in full are not found in any extant Gallican Missal, but their presence is sometimes indicated as here by the opening words 'Qui pridie.' So in an eighth-century Gallican fragment found by the Rev. H. B. Swete, A.D. 1867, attached to one of the covers of MS. 153 in Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge. Miss. Richenov. ii. p. 4; Miss. Goth. No. lxxv. p. 142. See Post Sanctus in Miss. Moz. pp. 181, 198, &c. The remainder may be supplied in the case of the Gallican Liturgy, and therefore by implication in the case of the Celtic Liturgy, from S. Ambros. de Sacram. lib. iv. cap. 5. See pp. 109-10.

192 a. Sac. Leon. p. 305; Gregor. pp. 100, 182.

193. We have here an example of the 'Deprecatio' of the Celtic Liturgy, in its proper position before the Preface, offered here pro vivis instead of pro defunctis. See p. 106.

194. See note 193. The same word (deprecari) occurs in Prefaces peculiar to the Drummond Missal. 'Et tuam immensam dementiam humiliter deprecari, ut mentibus nostris in beati apostoli,' &c. (fol. 65 b). 'Deprecantes majestatem tuam ut venturam beati .N. confessoris tui festivitatem,' &c. (fol. 83 a).

195. 1 Cor. ii. 9. These words occur in the Great Oblation in the Greek Liturgy of St. James, and in the Preface of that of St. Mark.

196. This collect occurs at the conclusion of an office for the Unction and Communion of the sick in a French thirteenth-century codex in the Library of St. Victor de Paris; Mart. vol. i. ordo xxii. p. 335; Sac. Gelas. p. 553.

197. A similar framework of a collect occurs in Sac. Leon. p. 461.

198. See p. 167. n. 3.

199. See note 43.

200. The rest of fol. 45 a is blank.

§ 15.—IRISH FRAGMENTS. LATER IRISH MISSALS.

Three Irish MS. Missals are extant of considerably later date than the Stowe Missal; viz. the Drummond Missal (eleventh century), the property of Lady Willoughby d'Eresby, found at Drummond Castle in Perthshire A.D. 1787; the Corpus Missal (twelfth century), in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, published by Messrs. Pickering, London, 1879 (several coloured photozincograph facsimiles of pages in this Missal are exhibited in the Second Part of the National Manuscripts of Ireland, Dublin, 1878); the Rosslyn Missal (thirteenth or fourteenth century), which once belonged to the Sinclairs of Rosslyn, and is now in the Advocates' Library at Edinburgh.

All these Missals are mainly Roman or Sarum in their structure and contents, and throw no light on the liturgical use of the early Celtic Church, except in the exhibition of various modifications of ritual, the retention of certain Irish and other names of saints¹, and the use of certain collects, postcommons, &c. which are not found in other Missals, and the allusions in which are evidently drawn from some purely local source. It would be impossible here to present all these variations in a tabular form². Attention has been drawn to a few of the more important of them, in illustration of points touched upon in the foregoing pages. As a sample of such collects, &c. we append the Missae for the festivals of St. Bridget and St. Patrick as contained in the Corpus and Rosslyn Missals, calling attention to the evident antiquity of the language. The Roman Missal contains no proper

Missa for St. Bridget, only a special collect for St. Patrick. The Sarum Missal contains proper Missae both for St. Bridget and St. Patrick, but in neither Missal do any of the following collects occur. There is nothing, however, technically Celtic about them. They are either native compositions on the Roman model, or consist of Gelasian or Gregorian frames with the names of Celtic saints patchworked into them.

§ 16.—IRISH FRAGMENTS. PARIS MS. 2333 A. COLBERT.

The following Missa is written at the close of a life of St. Brendan in a fourteenth-century MS. 2333 A. Colbert. Nat. Libr. Paris. Fol. 147 b. Printed Catalogue, iv. 504.

[MISSA IN FESTO SANCTI BRENDANI.]

lent use of the words 'Scoti' and 'Hibernenses,' which ceased to be convertible terms in the tenth century; (2) the reference to the previous heathenism of Ireland; (3) the oblique mode of the Invocation of Saints which marks the above collects; (4) the description of the Eucharistic offering as 'spirituale sacrificium,' Stowe Missal, p. 237; (5) the allusion in the secreta to the ancient tradition found both in the Gaelic hymn of St. Fiacc and the Latin hymn of St. Sechnall, that on the day of judgment the men of Erin will stand round St. Patrick before the judgment-seat of God (Lib. Hymn., part ii. p. 297; part i. p. 22. n. 92). The memoirs of St. Patrick in the Book of Armagh speak of his 'conductio omnium sanctorum Hiberniae in die iudicii' (fol. 15, 16). An old Gaelic Life of St. Patrick preserved in the Leabhar Breac asserts that 'though great is St. Patrick's honour still among men, it will be still greater at the meeting of Doom, where he will be like every chief apostle, passing judgment on the men of Ireland unto whom he preached' (fol. 29 b). It was one of the three requests granted to St. Patrick before his death 'ut Hybernenses omnes in die iudicii a te iudicentur' (Vit. S. Patric. ii. p. 333, inter Bedae Op., Basil. 1563).

POSTCOMMUNIO.

Protegat nos, domine, cum tui perceptione sacramenti beatus brendanus abbas pro nobis intercedendo, ut conuersionis eius experiamur insignia, et intercessionis eius experiamur suffragia. per.

§ 17.—MISSALE VESONTIONENSE.

This Sacramentary, which is described by Dr. O'Connor at some length as '*Missale Hibernicum Bobiense*¹,' and by Dr. Lanigan as '*Cursus Scotorum*²,' is a Gallican, not an Irish Missal, and has been printed as such by Mabillon under the title of '*Sacramentarium Gallicanum*³,' by Muratori⁴, and by G. H. Forbes, with a complete apparatus criticus, under the title of *Missale Vesontionense*⁵ (=of Besançon). It is a seventeenth-century MS. found by Mabillon in the monastery of Bobbio, and believed to have been carried thither by St. Columbanus from Luxeuil. It is now in the National Library at Paris, No. 13246.

As frequent and confusing allusions have been made to this supposed Irish Missal in the pages of various writers, in recent times⁶, it may be useful to summarise the reasons against an Irish and in favour of its Gallican origin.

B., Cathedra Petri, Lond. 1879, p. 47; Malone, S., Ch. Hist. of Ireland, Dublin, 1880, vol. i. ch. 10. ⁷ Mus. It. i. 276.

⁸ Rer. Hibern. Script. i. p. xxxi.

(b) The absence throughout of the names of any Irish saints.

(c) The presence of the names of various Gallican saints; e.g. of St. Hilary and St. Martin in the clause 'Communicantes,' &c. within the Canon¹. There are proper Missae for St. Martin of Tours, 'In depositione Sancti Martini Episcopi²;' and for St. Sigismund, King of the Burgundians, 'Missa Sancti Sigismundi Regis³.' Sigismund was defeated and murdered by Chlodomir A.D. 523. The commemoration of this king suggested the title of 'Missale Vesontionense' for this Sacramentary.

(d) The use throughout of Gallican terms; e.g. Collectio post nomina, Collectio ad pacem, Contestatio, Benedictio turris⁴.

(e) Certain well-known Gallican features of arrangement; e.g. the Rogation Days are marked for observance before Ascension Day by the provision of Legenda and a Missa in Letaniis. The 'Missa in Adsumptione Sanctae Mariae' is assigned to Jan. 18 (instead of Aug. 15), immediately preceded by the 'Missa in Cathedra Sancti Petri⁵.'

Further forms of devotion not of a technically liturgical character, and in their present shape only very remotely connected with the Celtic Church, survive in a tenth-century Breton Litany, first published by Mabillon⁶ from a Rheims MS., and printed in H. and S., Councils, ii. i. 81; and in the sixteenth-century Scottish Litany (Antiquae Litaniae) referred to on p. 166.

³ Ib. p. 297.

⁵ It is fair to add that the same arrangement occurs in the Félire of Oengus, Leabhar Breac, p. 80. In the same 'Félire' St. John and St. James are simultaneously commemorated on Dec. 27 (ib. p. 102), a curious association which is also found in the Sacramentarium Gallicanum, p. 226, and the Missale Gothicum, p. 41. These and such like coincidences, instead of proving the Irish origin of the Missale Vesontionense, prove how far certain early Irish ecclesiastical documents were affected by Gallican influence.

THE OXFORD BIBLE FOR TEACHERS.

Extracts from Opinions.

"The large collection of varied information which you have appended to the OXFORD BIBLE FOR TEACHERS, in a form so readily available for reference, has evidently been compiled with the greatest care; and the testimony which you have received to its accuracy is a guarantee of its high value. I cannot doubt that the volume, in its various forms, will be of great service."—THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.

"The notion of including in one volume all the helps that a clergyman or teacher would be likely to want for the study of the Bible has never been realised before with the same success that you have attained in the OXFORD BIBLE FOR TEACHERS. In the small edition (Ruby 16mo. thin), by the use of paper very skilfully adapted to the purpose, there is a Bible with an Atlas, a Concordance, an Index, and several Tractates on various points of Biblical antiquity, the whole, in a very solid binding, weighing a pound and an ounce: no great weight for what is really a miniature library. The clergy will probably give the preference to the larger book, marked No. 4. This includes the Apocrypha, with all the helps to the use of the Bible that distinguish the series. Its type is excellent. Many clergymen are obliged to write sermons when travelling from place to place. This volume would serve as a small library for that purpose, and not too large for the most moderate portmanteau. I think that this work in some of its forms should be in the hands of every teacher. The atlas is very clear and well printed. The explanatory work and the indices, so far as I have been able to examine them, are very carefully done. I am glad that my own University has, by the preparation of this series of books, taken a new step for the promotion of the careful study of the Word of God. That such will be the effect of the publication I cannot doubt."—THE ARCHBISHOP OF YORK.

"It would be difficult, I think, to provide for Sunday-School Teachers, or indeed for other students of the Bible, so much valuable information in so convenient a form as is now comprised in the OXFORD BIBLE FOR TEACHERS."—THE BISHOP OF LONDON.

"The idea of a series of Bibles in different types, corresponding page for page with one another, is one which the Dean has long wished to see realised for the sake of those who find the type of their familiar copies no longer available The amount of information compressed into the comparatively few pages of the Appendix is wonderful. And the Dean is glad to hear that the help of such eminent contributors has been available for its compilation. The Concordance seems to be sufficiently full for reference to any text that may be required."—THE DEAN OF ROCHESTER.

"Having by frequent use made myself acquainted with this edition of the Holy Scriptures, I have no hesitation in saying that it is a most valuable book, and that the explanatory matter collected in the various appendices cannot but prove most helpful, both to teachers and learners, in acquiring a more accurate and extensive knowledge of the Word of God."—THE BISHOP OF LICHFIELD.

"I have examined the OXFORD BIBLE FOR TEACHERS with very great care, and congratulate you upon the publication of so valuable a work. It contains within a reasonable compass a large mass of most useful information, arranged so conveniently as to be easily accessible, and its effect will be not merely to aid, but also, I think, to stimulate the studies of the reader. The book is also printed so beautifully, and is so handsome in every way, that I expect it will be greatly sought after, as a most acceptable present to any who are engaged in teaching in our Sunday Schools and elsewhere."—THE DEAN OF CANTERBURY.

THE OXFORD BIBLE FOR TEACHERS.

"I have examined with some care a considerable portion of the 'Helps to the Study of the Bible,' which are placed at the end of the OXFORD BIBLE FOR TEACHERS, and have been much struck with the vast amount of really useful information which has there been brought together in a small compass, as well as the accuracy with which it has been compiled. The botanical and geological notices, the account of the animals of Scripture, &c., seem to be excellent, and the maps are admirable. Altogether, the book cannot fail to be of service, not only to teachers, but to all who cannot afford a large library, or who have not time for much independent study."—THE DEAN OF PETERBOROUGH.

"I have been for some time well aware of the value of the OXFORD BIBLE FOR TEACHERS, and have been in the habit of recommending it, not only to Sunday-School Teachers, but to more advanced students, on the ground of its containing a large mass of accurate and well-digested information, useful and in many cases indispensable to the thoughtful reader of Holy Scripture; in fact, along with the Bible, a copious Index, and a Concordance complete enough for all ordinary purposes, this one volume includes a series of short but comprehensive chapters equivalent to a small library of Biblical works."—THE BISHOP OF LIMERICK.

"Having examined the OXFORD BIBLE FOR TEACHERS carefully, I am greatly pleased with it. The 'Helps to the Study of the Bible' at the end contain a great amount of most valuable information, well calculated not only to lead to a good understanding of the text, but to stimulate the student to further efforts. It differs from many publications in this, that the information is so admirably arranged, that it is well suited for reference, and is easily available for the student. The edition would be most useful to Sunday-School Teachers, a great help to those who desire that the young shall have a real knowledge of the Word of God."—THE BISHOP OF CORK.

"The OXFORD BIBLE FOR TEACHERS may, I think, without exaggeration, be described as a wonderful edition of the Holy Scriptures. The clearness and beauty of the type, and the convenient shape of the volume, leave nothing to be desired. I know nothing of the same compass which can be compared to the 'Helps to the Study of the Bible' for fulness of information and general accuracy of treatment. It is only real learning which can accomplish such a feat of compression."—THE BISHOP OF DERRY AND RAPHAEL.

"I consider the OXFORD BIBLE FOR TEACHERS to be simply the most valuable edition of the English Bible ever presented to the public."—THE VEN. ARCHDEACON REICHEL.

"The OXFORD BIBLE FOR TEACHERS is in every respect, as regards type, paper, binding, and general information, the most perfect volume I have ever examined."—THE REV. PREBENDARY WILSON, of the National Society's Depository.

"The essence of fifty expensive volumes, by men of sacred learning, is condensed into the pages of the OXFORD BIBLE FOR TEACHERS."—THE REV. ANDREW THOMSON, D.D., Edinburgh.

"The latest researches are laid under contribution, and the Bible Student is furnished with the piñ of them all."—DR. STOUGHTON.

"The whole combine to form a Help of the greatest value."—DR. ANGUS.

"I cannot imagine anything more complete or more helpful."—DR. W. MORLEY PUNSHON.

"I congratulate the teacher who possesses it, and knows how to turn its 'Helps' to good account."—DR. KENNEDY.

THE OXFORD BIBLE FOR TEACHERS.

"The OXFORD BIBLE FOR TEACHERS is the most valuable help to the study of the Holy Scriptures, within a moderate compass, which I have ever met with. I shall make constant use of it; and imagine that few who are occupied with, or interested in the close study of the Scriptures, will allow such a companion to be far from their side."—THE REV. BALDWIN BROWN.

"I do not think I shall ever leave home without the OXFORD BIBLE FOR TEACHERS, for one can scarcely miss his ordinary books of reference when this Bible is at hand. I know no other edition which contains so much valuable help to the reader."—THE REV. A. H. CHARTERIS, D.D., Dean of the Chapel Royal.

"The OXFORD BIBLES FOR TEACHERS are as good as ever we can expect to see."—THE REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

"The modest title of the work scarcely does justice to the range of subjects which it comprehends, and the quality of their treatment. As a manual of Biblical information and an auxiliary of Biblical study, it is unrivalled. It is as exhaustive as it is concise,—no irrelevant matter has been introduced, and nothing essential to Biblical study seems to have been omitted,—and in no instance, so far as I can judge, has thoroughness or accuracy been sacrificed to the necessities of condensation."—THE REV. ROBERT N. YOUNG, of Headingley College, Leeds.

"The OXFORD BIBLE FOR TEACHERS is really one of the greatest boons which in our day has been offered to the reading public. The information given is so various, and so complete, as scarcely to leave a single desideratum. To Christians, in their quiet researches at home, or in the course of extensive journeys, or in preparation for the duties of tuition, it is simply invaluable, and constitutes in itself a Biblical Library. The range of topics which it seeks to illustrate is very great, while the care and accuracy manifest in the articles deserves the highest praise. It is no exaggeration to say, that to the mass of Christian people it saves the expense of purchasing and the toil of consulting a library of volumes. At the same time, I know no book more likely to stimulate enquiry, and to give the power of appreciating further research into the history, structures, and meaning of the Sacred Oracles."—DR. GOOLD, of Edinburgh.

"I have only recently possessed one of the OXFORD BIBLES FOR TEACHERS; and after a most patient examination of it, am astonished at the immense amount of accurate and carefully digested matter it contains: and that, too, of a kind precisely adapted to the Teacher's needs. Would that such a Bible had been within my reach when I first began my teaching life; and would that I had possessed one earlier, since I began to write for Teachers. As I look at its upwards of 300 pages of 'Helps to the Study of the Bible,' I recall my toilsome pilgrimage through many volumes, at much expenditure of time, for what is here so distinctly stated and tabulated. With such a desk companion I might have done so much more, and done it so much better. All I can do now is to entreat all Teachers who need a perfectly reliable Bible for study or class purposes, to procure one of the OXFORD BIBLES FOR TEACHERS. This I do most earnestly. And I would add that as a presentation volume by a class to its Teacher, or by a School to its Superintendent, no gift would be better appreciated or more appropriate than the small quarto size with its wide margin, and magnificent type, and superb flexible binding."—THE REV. JAMES COMPER GRAY, Author of "Class and Desk," "Topics for Teachers," "Biblical Museum," &c., &c.

"These admirable Bibles must tend to extend the fame even of the Oxford Press."—THE RIGHT HON. W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P.
